B.F. Goodrich Tubeless Tire

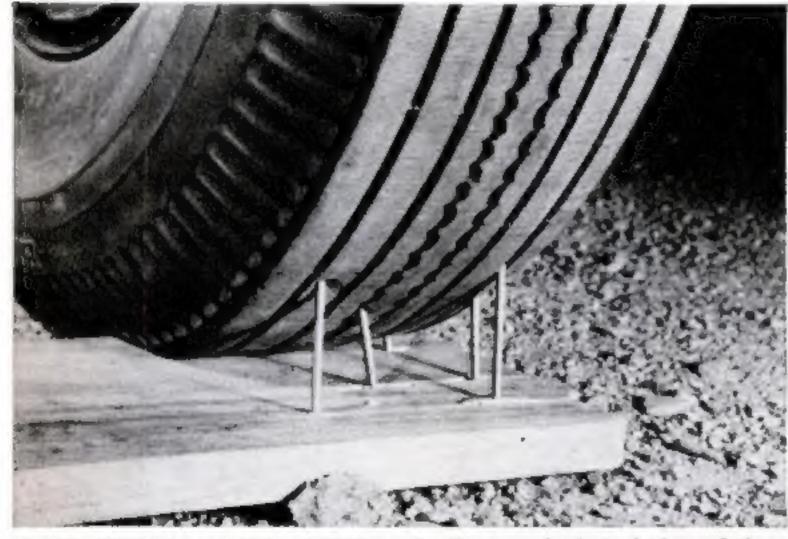

IS THE ONLY TIRE THAT GETS TALKED ABOUT LIKE THIS

IN 5 YEARS, THOUSANDS OF USERS have proved that B. F. Goodrich Tubeless Tires seal punctures, protect against blowouts, defy skids. And many write to tell us so. Back in 1949, John E. Packard of West Palm Beach bought his first set. Above, he's getting his third. He writes: "Have never had a flat, even when a nail is pulled out. The outstanding feature is the feeling of security."

SAVED BY LIFE-SAVERS FROM A SKID ACCIDENT that wrecked another car on an icy bridge, C. D. Myers of Dallas wrote last January: "I am grateful for this new tread and the safety it brings." Now on his fifth set, he's logged 200,000 miles. The LIFE-SAVER has a tread with thousands of tiny grip-blocks. In the wet road test, above, it stops a car length quicker at 30 mph than car on regular tires.

"EVEN THOUGH I REMOVED 14 NAILS and splinters and a jagged piece of glass, no flats in 17,894 miles of driving on Tubeless Tires," reported D. W. Grufman in 1950. You can drive the BFG LIFE-SAVER over spikes, and it does not go flat. A patented gummy sealant under the tread seals against puncturing object, plugs hole permanently when object is removed.

"NEVER HAD A BLOWOUT," H. Erling of Fargo, above, wrote in May. "We were skeptical back in 1948. Now we have BFG Tubeless Tires on all our company cars. We feel it's the safest tire made." A patented liner changes bruise blowouts to safe s-s-slowouts. The LIFE-SAVER costs only $29.95 and your old tire for the Chevrolet-Ford size, less than a regular tire and any blowout protecting tube.

"I'M A JUGGLER," says Mrs. Harry Traulsen who manages four small children, a 14-room house on Long Island plus a 366-acre New Hampshire farm. For New York shopping trip (including children's visit to famous Automat) Mrs. Traulsen wears Sacony wool fiannel suit with close-fitting jacket, new pared-down skirt. Suit in 29.95.

SACONY'S FLABBERGASTING FLANNELS

They're purest wool, they're fully lined, they cost only 29.95 each suit

Top fashion collections on both sides of the Atlantic made one thing clear. There is a renewed interest in the dependable stand-by fabrics—such as fine tweeds and creamy flannels. As one fabric stylist put it, "Women have had their fill of miracle monstrosities. They're looking for a good piece of goods again." Starting with a "good piece of goods," Sacony has produced a collection of 29.95 flannel suits with such superb styling and crack tailoring that they flabbergasted hard-to-impress store buyers. Now available in the stores, they're flabbergasting the customers even more. For at 29.95, a fully lined really good suit is rarer than a five cent cup of coffee. These Sacony flannel suits come in yarn-dyed colors—grey, brown, and the important new beige. They also come in vivid colors and clear pastels. To forestall expensive alterations, Sacony makes several styles in four separate size ranges—misses, women's half-sizes, juniors and petites. For local store names, write Sacony, College Point, Long Island, New York.

← ARCHITECT JACQUELINE DUBY checks progress on East River (New York) housing project she helped to plan for big architectural firm Emery Roth & Sons. Her 29.95 Sacony flannel suit has a lined cardigan jacket, ostrich leather trimming on belt.

WOMEN BROKERS are rare, and account executive June Kirchmann loves her job with famous Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane. Miss Kirchmann wears Sacony two-tone flannel suit with important new over-sized collar. The price 29.95.

Have you ever stopped to think of the tremendous advances in car design in just the last few years?

Automatic gear shifts, air-conditioning, power steering, power brakes, and higher and higher horse power . . . all these dreams have become realities as the automotive industry moves forward.

Many of these advancements, of course, put an extra burden on the tires that modern cars ride on.

That's why Goodyear has to anticipate new car designs . . . to be ready, not only to match today's achievements, but to prepare for the cars of tomorrow!

In spite of such extra demands, today's De Luxe Super-Cushions give you more trouble-free mileage than ever before. It's a fact that the cost to you per thousand miles of riding on Goodyear tires today is less than half what it was in 1926! No wonder, then, that today—as in 1915—more people ride on Goodyear tires than on any other kind!

Car makers—who insist on the best tires—put more De Luxe Super-Cushions on the new cars than any other tire. Car owners buy more De Luxe Super-Cushions than any other low-pressure tire.

The tire preferred by car makers and car owners is your best buy, too. Goodyear, Akron 16, Ohio.

America needs better, safer roads. Let's bring them up to PAR.

Small spaces seem bigger, long drives seem shorter with DESOTO Full Power Steering!

The next time you brace yourself for that tug of war called parking, remember this: In a De Soto, it's child's play. "Hydraulic muscles" do the work of turning—the very instant you nudge the wheel. That's Full Power Steering for you, and it makes parking as easy as dialing a telephone.

And on the road it gives you finger-light control. You take bumps and cross winds without shock or "wheel fight." And in a De Soto you have the world's most powerful engine design, the 160 h.p. Fire Dome V-8 to dissolve great distances, defy steep hills.

But the greatness of De Soto isn't measured simply by these features, impressive though they are. De Soto has been brilliantly engineered throughout. From Power Brakes to big, scenic windows, from the huge trunk (44% bigger) to sofa-wide, chair-high seats, this car is built to be a great motoring value.

Every inch, every pound is money's worth in a De Soto. A ride will prove it. Try a Fire Dome V-8 or Powermaster Six and see! De Soto Division, Chrysler Corporation

BASEBALL CURVES, DOESN'T BREAK

Sirs:

"Camera and Science Settle the Old Rhubarb about Baseball's Curve Ball" (Life, July 27) is predicated on one pitch made by one pitcher. No two pitchers throw alike. None of their curves break exactly the same. None of them travel at exactly the same speed. Your conclusion should have been: "The particular pitch made on this particular occasion by this particular pitcher surved but did not break."

DON HILL

Columbus, Ohio

Sirs:

Your wind tunnel was a flop. It did not take gravity into consideration since the ball was held at a fixed elevation. It did not consider change in the speed of the ball since wind velocity in the tunnel remained constant. Nor does the moving train illustration apply to "break." Pitched balls do not travel in fixed straight lines as do trains.

JOHN T. RANSOM

Belleville, Ont., Canada

● Life tested curves thrown by four pitchers, among them Ken Raffensberger, who threw 138 times for Photographer Mili's cameras. Pictures of his best curve, which were published in Life, show it did not break. The wind tunnel corroborated this by re-creating the curve "as nearly as possible." The picture of an onrushing train—though trains do not, of course, behave like baseballs—was a valid and familiar analogy, showing why swiftly moving objects give an illusion of "break."—ED.

Sira:

Any one who has played ball knows that a slow curve is known as a "roundhouse," and only a fast curve will break sharply. The vertical trajectory shown in the picture taken from the side shows that this was not a fast curve.

W. N. FORGER

White Plains, N.Y.

Sira:

What I think you overlook is that a curve ball attains added "break" as spin overcomes momentum. ... As the ball proceeds toward the plate enough momentum is lost, however imperceptibly, for spin augmented by wind to result in a sharp curve.

If only a batter perceived this "break," your theory might stand up. But you can sit as far away from home plate as you can see and perceive the same sudden curve seen by the batter.

Louis Lee Arms

Hermosa Beach, Calif.

• Life's pitchers threw their best curves at slow speed, half that of a fast ball. Presumably a curve ball pitcher sacrifices the effort normally put into speed to get more spin. Though long held, the theory that "break" is caused by spin suddenly overcoming momentum was not sustained in the

A possible explanation of what spectators think they see may lie in the fact that most curve balls are thrown at an angle. They begin on one side of a straight line between pitcher and home plate and, curving slightly, end up on the other side of the line.—ED.

Sirs:

In response to Michener's novel, you published a letter from Mrs. William Blackford Jr. (Letters to the Editors, July 27) in which she spoke of her husband flying the same "winged Maytag" (F4U-4) off the U.S.S.

Princeton in Korean waters that he had flown in 1946, seven years before. I thought you should know that Lieut.
Blackford was killed in action on July 25, the day before the truce. I presume he died in the same plane.
Lieut. Blackford was a friend of mine, a teacher in this school before he returned to active duty. He leaves his wife and two small boys.

LIEUT. BLACKFORD

Sirs:

Mrs. Blackford's letter and this morning's newspaper report of her husband's death made a nonfiction story of The Bridges at Toko-Ri.

Mrs. Charles Cadjew

• Lieutenant Blackford volunteered for active duty with his wife's approval. "Bill was doing what he wanted to do," she says. "Unlike Mr. Michener's hero, my husband knew exactly what he was fighting for."—ED.

OPEN-END MORTGAGES

Sirst

For many years the nation's organized homebuilders have been campaigning in behalf of such mortgages ("The Open End for Home Mortgages", Live, July 27). When home owners have 20th Century mortgages incorporating the open-end principle, combined with reasonable down payments and monthly amortizations which place housing cost below or on a par with rent, then we will see an even further rise in home ownership.

EMANUEL M. SPIECEL

National Association of Home Builders Washington, D.C.

Sirst

You observed that today it is possible to open-end a mortgage in every state but Texas. For the past two years our mortgage loans committee, of which I am chairman, has been studying the subject, but has had to face the fact that there is no provision in our state laws for this type of mortgage. I would appreciate knowing if we have overlooked any particular statute or act.

J. E. BRUCKLACHER

Pennsylvania Bankers Association Harrisburg, Pa.

 There is no legal provision. But in Philadelphia, for example, while few banks permit open-end mortgages, most savings and loan associations do.—ED.

Sirs:

L-3433

Your article described our family's problem as though you had us in mind. Fired with enthusiasm, we called our mortgage broker and were told that not only would our bank not give us an open-end mortgage, but they knew of no bank that would. Two other banks also refused. One representative stated his bank would give open-end mortgages to non-GI mortgage applicants but not to veterans. He said that as far as he knew "the Veterans Administration will not allow a GI mortgage to be open-ended," The key phrase seems to be "understanding banker." Where are they?

HARRISON M. ROLLINS

Levittown, N.Y.

■ The VA does allow mortgages it insures to be openended, subject to state regulations. A banker's reluctance to extend GI mortgages stems from the fact that they earn only 4½% interest as against the standard 5% or more. In Mr. Rollins' area, however, the Dime Savings Bank of Brooklyn issues open-end GI mortgages—ED.

'THE ROBE'

Sirs:

Movie archaeology is fascinating. Studios spend vast sums for researching historical epics, then seem to start from scratch. There are a few people whose portraits are favorites among set designers, used again and again regardless of the periods in which they lived. The supreme favorite seems to be Antinoüs. So it was no surprise to see a statue of him once again in Lafe's coverage of The Robe ("Big Face, Big Scene, Big Screen, Big News," Life, July 27), the events of which took place 80 years before Antinoüs was born.

• Antinoüs, a favorite companion of Roman Emperor Hadrian in the Second Century A.D., wandered into the film before his time. Twentieth-Century-Fox rented him from M-G-M.—ED.

ZEKE THE ANTIQUE SEEKER

Sire:

I am one of the widows from whom Mr. Liverant has purchased antiques ("Zeke the Seeker," Life, July 27). During my husband's fatal illness, it became necessary for me to give up our New York apartment and dispose of most of its contents. When Mr. Liverant bought our things he could have taken advantage of my desperately emotional state. Instead, he gave me fair prices and displayed an understanding rarely found in business dealings.

MRS. HERBERT DITTLER

Old Lyme, Conn.

OLD WORD RENEWED

Sira:

Now we may expect a renaissance of "whiginalecrie" ("A Seat in the Sun," LIFE, July 27) rivaling that of "normaley" inspired by President Harding. One of your editors has probably done more for the word than any other writer since Robert Burns, who used the plural form in The Brigs of Avr (1786):

"... gin ye be a brig as auld as me— Tho' faith, that date, I doubt, ye'll never see— There'll be, if that day comes, I'll wad a hoddle, Some fewer whigmaleeries in your noddle."

SPEAKING OF PICTURES...

. . . The death charge of an African lioness is caught in a terrifying photograph

Lions on the hunt are seldom seen and even less frequently photographed. They follow their prey for miles and make their final charge, which lasts a matter of seconds, only during the brief hours of twilight or dawn. British Photographer Peter Butler, on safari across the plains of Tanganyika, was in a hiding place in the brush recently, casually taking motion pictur is of a herd of impalas grazing in a clearing. Suddenly he saw a honess silently stalking through the undergrowth. The herd, sensing the danger intered little coughs of warning to one another and then took flight, bounding away at more than 30 miles an hour. In the next instant Butler swung his camera to get this remarkable picture, freezing the terrifying action of the honess as she lunged across the clearing, seconds before sinking her teeth into one of the frightened impala.

THE BEAUTIFUL NEW FORD VICTORIA

You don't drive a Ford...a Ford drives you!

A Ford car is probably the most helpful car you ever laid your hands on!

Not only does it seem to think for you, it acts for you! Just turn the ignition key and it starts! If you're driving a Fordomatic Ford, just put the drive selector in "Da" position and it "shifts" for you, and a whale of a lot better than you could ever do it by hand. You get exactly the right amount of power you want when you want it—automatically. Now you simply can't beat that!

As for braking. That suspended brake pedal is a brake you love to touch because it brings you to smooth, smooth, straight-line stops so quickly and easily.

Steering? Owners say you don't steer a Ford—you guide it—it's that easy. A feature that the little lady will really appreciate especially after a full day behind the wheel! And with Master-Guide power steering (an optional extra) your car gains still more in sure-footed roadability, while you expend even less effort in handling and in parking.

When it comes to riding comfort, what we've done is really something. For example, front-end road shock is actually reduced as much as 80%. Extra-long rear springs, viscous control shock absorbers and foam-rubber cushions add their share to give you a ride that lets you forget the road surface.

Now add to all these things nearly two score more "Worth More" features and you'll realize why the Ford car is not only worth more when you take delivery but when you sell it, too.

Why not let a Ford take you for a Test Drive? See for yourself how this helpful car takes the work out of driving. You'll say you've never driven a car that's more delightful to handle.

Worth more when you buy...when you sell it, too

A familiar sight around LIFE as it is going to press is the diffident appearance of photographers at the entrance of an editor's office. There they lurk in brooding silence until noticed, usually holding certain of their reject picturesphotographs left over from stories chosen for the issue. Such was the case one day last week when an editor looked up to see Lisa Larsen, who took most of the pictures of the great bird hunt on pages 24, 25, in his doorway. At his nod, she entered. Didn't he think, Miss Larsen asked, that these were nice pictures? Looking at the four photographs she put before him, he agreed, sure. Well, she ventured further, didn't he think they ought to be in the story? Having seen all the pictures and reached his decision on that question earlier, the editor showed her the finished layout. Didn't she think it was a nice layout? Well, she agreed, sure. Since this was all the space available, would she want to make all the pictures smaller-or throw some of them out-in order to get her favorites in? No, no, but didn't the editor think? . . .

We managed to find a simple way out of the dilemma. in Miss Larsen's case at least, by publishing her favorite rejects in the miniscule form above. At the same time, looking around at all the other pictures discarded in a week's work, we are reminded again that there is really no easy way out, that the most painful necessity of all editing processes will always be the process of rejection.

IT'S RHUBARB TIME AT THE BALL PARK

The strain of the baseball pennant races lay heavily on the leading contenders last week. The heckling epithets players threw at rivals grew sharper, anarls at teammates' errors turned nastier, and players were ready to fight at the drop of a bat. The brawling "rhubarbs" broke out everywhere. In Milwaukee where the first-place Dodgers were playing the second-place Braves, Dodger Catcher Campanella went after a pitcher who had thrown balls at his head and then called him some unrepeatable name. In a New York saloon a Braves pitcher punched his team's short-stop, and in a Maryland nightclub the League's batting champ, Ferris Fain of the White Sox, broke one of his valuable fingers in a fist fight.

It has been the roughest year in baseball since the days of Ty Cobb. The rhubarbs started early when Clint Courtney of the Browns and the Yanks' Phil Rizzuto set off a two-team battle. This was followed later by a slugging match between the Yankees' Billy Martin and Detroit's Matt Batts. But the most spectacular fight took place in Hollywood last week where the slide below started the free-for-all shown on the next two pages.

EVERYBODY, EVEN THE UMP, PILES INTO WEST'S RUCKUS

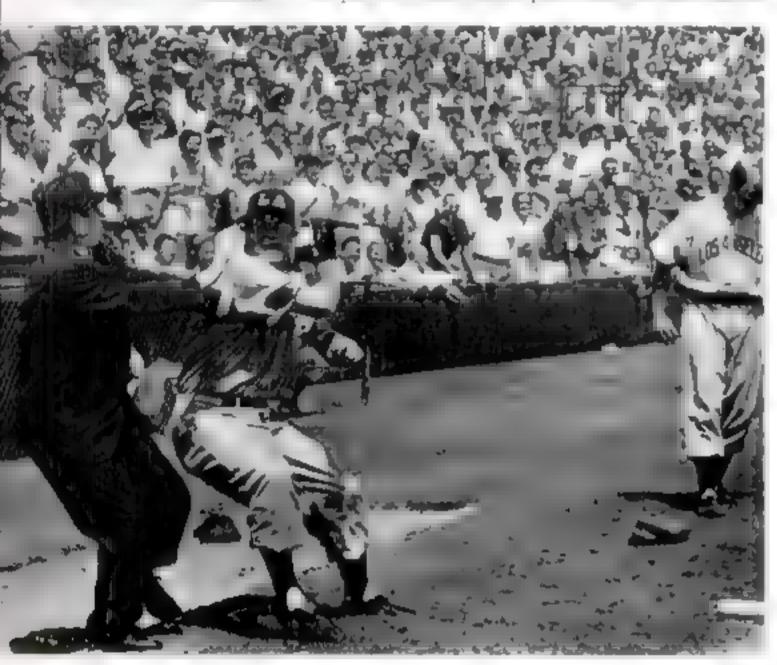

The West Coast fans who came out to the Hollywood bad park to watch the league-leading Hollywood Stars play the Los Angeles Angels got to see two diamond fights for the price of one. The first started when the Angels' pitcher, Joe Hatten, threw two close pitches at Frank Kellsher, whose timely litting had won the two previous games for the Stars and had given them a two-run leid in this game. One of the patches bit Kelleher, who punched Hatten (below) and was then ordered out of the game.

The man sent in to run for him, Tom Beard, made the victous slide into third (previous page) which brought on the battle shown above.

Out of these lights the players suffered a few minor cuts and bruises and a total of $200 in times. But if they were a little bit bruised and a little bit poorer, they really did not mind too much. The attendance at this embattle I series broke all records and the next series between the teams so helded for the end of the month—was sure to be a complete sellout.

A GOOD GUIDE FOR CONGRESS

LAST TRIBUTE TO A SENATOR

The body of Senator Taft was carried by an honor guard from the Capitol after a state funeral. In his eulogy Senator Bricker said, "When convinced of the rightness of a cause, he stood firm even if he stood alone." In the 83rd Congress, Robert Taft was a mighty useful and a unifying force—loyal to the Eisenhower administration, cooperative with the Democratic opposition and reassuring to the Republican irreconcilables. The loss of any leader, particularly one as skillful as Senator Taft, is a grievous blow.

There is, however, much wishful thinking in the speculations as to what will happen to the Republicans now. Senator Taft set an excellent course, and, following his lead, his fellow senators accomplished much of their most useful work in his absence. Since his death the Republicans have confirmed Senator Taft's personal choice for his successor, Senator Knowland, as their leader. Yet, on the whole, the Republicans have no reason to take great satisfaction in the record of the 83rd Congress up to its adjournment—it procrastinated, it wasted time in interminable investigation and in the end it did only those things which absolutely had to be done.

In his report to the nation last week the President spoke of difficulties encountered when a party takes over after 20 years of opposition. The difficulties are compounded when a President is elected by the greatest of majorities but his party controls Congress by the slimmest of margins. They are still further compounded when some of that party's rank and file find it difficult to after the stiff-necked old habits of opposition.

There are no end of excuses. A great many individual Republicans undoubtedly found the session frustrating. Nothing could be more exasperating, for example, than the present stubborn facts of national finance. Up to now many Republicans have felt they have been paying all of the penalties and enjoying none of the pleasures of power.

Obviously it isn't easy—as the President said—to change all this. The Administration has not only to pay the old bills of the previous regime but also has to liquidate its outworn policies. This is most true of foreign policy where the Korean truce, the upheaval in the satellites and the break in the Soviet oligarchy all call for new decisions and new policies. In the adjournment of Congress the President is given a breather—and opportunity to reconstruct his policies.

The adjournment gives individual congressmen an opportunity to reassess their attitudes and opinions. Next year the Republicans seeking re-election will not be running against the Truman administration but on the record of the Eisenhower administration. The example of loyal cooperation set by Taft is one recommended to his successors. He understood the difference between the rubber stamp of blind partisan loyalty and well-considered assent to a constructive program.

CHARITY VAUNTETH NOT ITSELF

TV givenway programs based on alleged philanthropy (Strike It Rich, Place the Face, etc.) have sunk about as low as it is possible to sink—although, when we say this, we hope we're not speaking rashly.

Last week on Strike It Ruch we watched a girl of Mexican-Navaho parentage, who owns a gift shop in Washington, competing. She was behind two months' rent and in danger of losing the shop; in telling about it she began to cry, and in instant sympathy the camera moved in for a close-up. It stayed there while she sobbed out correctly whether a lemur was an air or land animal, President Cleveland's first name, and the name of the tune Speak To Me of Love. When she learned that she had won $165, plus another $100 that a dairy president promised over the phone, she kissed the announcer's hand. There were tears all down our shirt front: we felt sorry for the proprietor, all right, but far sorrier for U.S. civilization.

Defenders of giveaway shows are loud in praise of the charity bestowed. Is it true charity? "Charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up," says the Bible. If a roller skate manufacturer is moved by the plight of a paraplegic, why doesn't he buy him a wheelchair, instead of smothering him with brand-name roller skates?

There is also the question of taste. Two recent examples of "confrontation," a new giveaway refinement, strike us as about as far south as anybody has gone in mass entertainment, if that is the word for it. In one, an elderly couple was confronted with a young couple that had been paying them a small sum each week for injuries in an auto accident. The program, Place the Face, bailed the young couple out on the last $500 of their debt, while our TV public had a mass snivel for itself. In the other show a would-be suicide was confronted with the man who rescued him. Obviously the next step is to confront a convicted murderer with the dug-up corpse of his victim: the $500 could be split between the executioner and the exhumers.

In 1949 the Federal Communications Commission banned giveaway shows on the grounds that they were lotteries, but this year in New York a U.S. district court ruled that they were not lotteries. Can't the FCC think up better grounds for another ban?

MOTHER PHOTOGRAPHS HER MINUTE-OLD BABY

In 11 years as a photographer for the Los Angeles Daily Veas. Helen Brush has taken exciting pictures of everything from suicides to atomic explosions. Two weeks ago, when she went to the hospital to have her first child, she decided to photograph "the biggest event in my life," and took her Leica along. Given only spinal anesthesia, she held her camera against her forehead and less than a minute after the baby was born recorded her first look at nine-pound Gilmer Loring Brush. In the best newspaper tradition Helen Brush scooped her husband, who is chief photographer for the Aeics. The best he could get, from the doorway of the delivery room, was a picture of his wife taking a picture of the baby (right).

BIG SWITCH IS OPEN

Reds are noisy, Gls content as PW trade begins

As "Operation Big Switch" got under way in Panmunjom last week, U.N. prisoners moved quietly and happily from their trucks and ambulances. Some had gruesome stories to tell, but with a few exceptions they seemed in better shape than the men who had preceded them in "Little Switch" more than three months before. Red prisoners, following standard procedure, put on a blatant propaganda show for their newsreel cameras. As they rode up in U.S. trucks, they defiantly waved Red flags and many stripped off their uniforms, tossing them contemptuously to the ground. Some spit in the faces of U.S. supervising officers. The U.N. got a sad shock when it learned that of the 8,705 U.S. soldiers missing in action, 2,000 to 3,000 were possibly alive and unaccounted for. The Communists countered with a claim the U.N. was holding back 2,000 Reds.

Governors meet to talk, listen, greet and eat

In Seattle, Wash, last week two important groups of Americans met. The governors of 42 states and three U.S. territories convened there in their annual conterence, and the Army troopship Marine Lynx pulled nato port, loaded with 2,313 men home from the Korean war. At the conference for discussion of such matters as federal-state relationships, tax proffens, penal reforms and education, the governors took time out to go down to the docks and greet the returning servicemen, then ride through the city with them in a welcome home parade. On the social side this was the most pheasurable event of the conference. On the business side the most impressive event was the appearance of the U.S. President (p. 30).

CRITICIZING EISENHOWER, GOVERNOR CLEMENT OF TENNESSEE DEF

PRESIDENT HEARS A CRITIC

One day late, delayed by services for Senator Taft, President Eisenhower reached Seattle, eager to explain to the governors his stand on issues ranging all the way from tax relief to Indochina. It was the first time a President had attended the governors' meeting since 1939, and the siginficance of his visit was lost neither on the President nor his listeners. For himself. Eisenhower never had forgotten that much of the political impetus that won him the nomination at Chicago last year came from the governors, and he intended again to make use of the support they represented. Referring to "my indestructible conviction that unless we preserve in this country the place of the state government . . we are not going to have America as we know it," the President declared the states were going to stand on their own feet in the future.

The nation's voungest governor, Frank Clement, 33, of Tennossee, firmly but politely commanded the ear of the Uniel Executive. At a discussion on resources, Clement took exception to the President's recent remarks citing the Tennessee Valley Authority as an example of "creeping socialism." "We honestly believe there has been a misunderstanding of the true facts" by the new national administration, Clements said, asking that the President make a personal investigation of TVA. The President offered no reply, but he listened soberly to the face-to-face criticism.

PRESIDENTIAL PROMISE to come back to the governors' conferences as often as he is invited is given by Eisenhower, speaking in setting of state flags.

A U.S. Navy pilot's two dunkings demonstrate that what a helicopter won't do a whaleboat will Waved off from a landing on the carrier Block Island near the Virginia coast, Pilot E. H. Barry caught his plane's arresting book in the deck barrier. He and his plane dived into the ocean, and the most modern means of rescue, the carrier's helicopter rushed up to save him. But as he was coming out, his chute opened and dragged him back. Frustrated, the helicopter handed over the job (right) to one of the seafarer's oldest means of rescue, a whaleboat.

Hateful Henry, snide old man of sour reputation.

Came snarling into Statler just to stir up consternation.

"I've heard about you folks," he rasped, "I'll put you to the test!

There's no one in the world who'd want to treat me like a guest".

2. When Henry saw his Statler room, his voice was harsh and grating.
"I'm trying to be difficult—you're not co-operating!
This room's too clean! That bed's too soft—the best I've ever had!
There's nothing to complain about! You trying to make me mad?

3. "So far as I'm concerned," he said, "I'd rather not be clean.

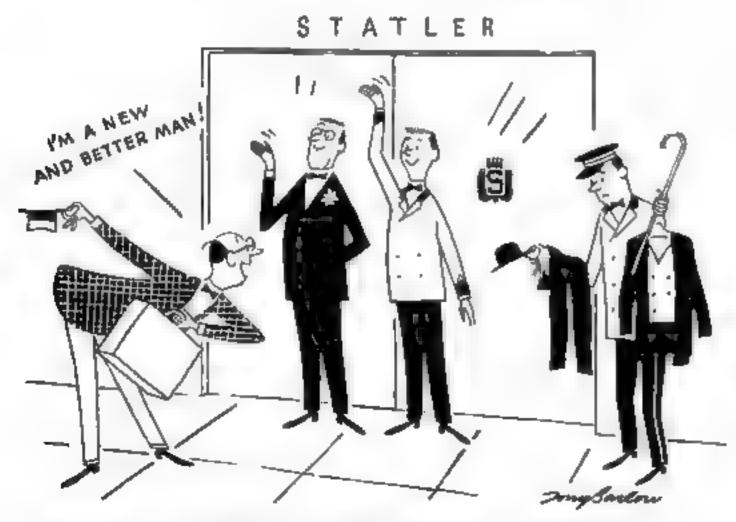

But the water's hot, there's lots of soap, and the whitest towels I've seen.

It puts me in a cheerful mood, and I just can't destroy it.

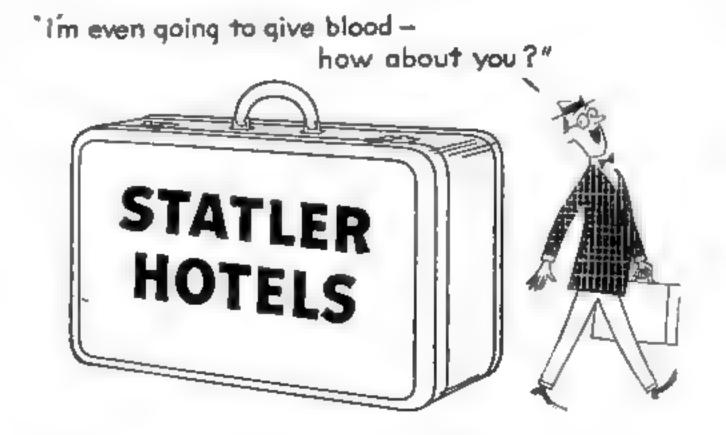

And no one else need ever know—I may as well enjoy it."

Then later in the dining room each dish that Henry tried
He found was really perfect. And he broke right down and cried.
"Oh, the years I've spent complaining! What a waste of time," he said,
"when all the while I could have been enjoying life instead!

Reds' H-bomb, France's strike, Haymes's trouble

PREMIER MALENKOV

Premier Georgi Malenkov made a startling announcement. Russia has mastered the production of the hydrogen bomb, he said, adding, "This should put an end to any chatterers' nonsense about Soviet weakness." He also said it was shortsighted to think the exposure of Lavrenti Beria as a master agent of imperialism showed weakness in the Soviet state.

U.S. scientists had detected no hydrogen explosion in the U.S.S.R. Malenkov may or may not have been bluffing. But a clue to the timing of his announcement might be found in some events of last week. John Foster Dulles flew to Korea, made a pact with Syngman Rhee to "meet the common danger" if the truce is violated; the U.N. revealed that 16 nations have vowed to protect South Korea; Eisenhower warned that the U.S. will defy aggression anywhere; signs of unrest continued to appear in Red satellites, notably more food riots in East Germany. But the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission was quick to point out it had never doubted Russia's ability to devise an H-bomb. That, they said, was the reason the U.S. had pushed through its own development of the superweapon.

Attilio Piccioni, member of Italy's Christian Democrat party and long-time supporter of recently deposed Premier de Gasperi, was asked by President Einaudi to form a new cabinet, accepted the job after being assured of support by three other center parties which withdrew their votes from De Gasperi. De Gasperi may become Piccioni's new foreign minister.

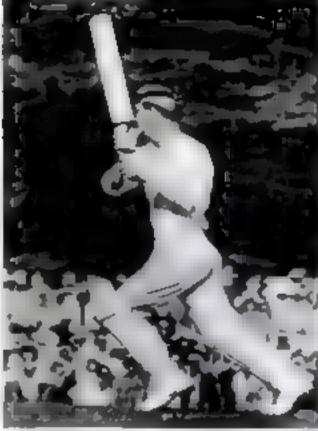

Trouble for Dick Haymes, Joe Adonis

U.S. immigration officials cracked down on two well publicized personages, said they would deport them to their native lands. One was Argentine-born Singer Dick Haymes, whose devotion to Rita Hayworth got him into trouble. After doing the Hollywood night spots with Miss Hayworth, Haymes followed her to Hawaii, failed to get reentry permits to the U.S. mainland, thereby forfeited his right to stay.

The second potential deportee is Italian-born Joe Doto, alias Joe Adonis, notorious New Jersey racketeer (Life, March 26, 1951), who is accused of returning to the U.S. from a Cuban visit seven years ago without a valid passport. But before he is shipped out, law officials want to try him for perjury during Bergen County and U.S. Senate crime inquiries.

The Federal Communications Commission announced it was ready to approve a new color TV system whose programs can be received on existing sets in black and white. The system, developed and approved by a group of experts from all parts of the TV industry, may go into regular use next year.

A versatile cricket player known in England for his powerful batting and bowling displayed his best form (above) in an exhibition match held at Arundel Castle last week. The opposing team showed no respect for the fact that he was Queen Elizabeth's husband Philip and won the game by seven runs.

Runaway French strike

As a protest against economy measures being proposed for the government by Premier Laniel, France's labor leaders called for a one-day mass waikout. They were delighted at the response. Two million government workers dutifully stayed home. Paralysis quickly set in on the nation's transportation and communication lines, fuel and power supplies were reduced, street-cleaning halted. The strike was the worst in 17 years. Then Red unions jumped on the bandwagon, demanded that the strike continue, making anti-Red labor leaders fear they could not stop the strike when it was supposed to end.

Premier Mossadegh last week opened polling places in Tehran to gain approval for his own, unconstitutional dissolution of the country's parliament. Any citizen who wanted to vote against the Mossadegh move had to go to a separate polling place, enter a door above which banners proclaimed "those who vote here are traitors and agents of the British," put his name, age, address and identity card number and thumbprint on his ballot. Under these circumstances only 116 out of 162,178 voters voted against the premier. But despite his apparent popularity, Mossadegh refused to leave his house on Kahk Street, possibly afraid of assassination.

JUSTICE GRINDS EXCEEDING FINE

AFTER 19 YEARS AN INNOCENT MAN IS FREED

Nineteen years ago in Fascist Italy, Carlo Corbisiero was sentenced to life imprisonment for murder. Two years later a Catholic priest, prompted by something he heard in confession, opened an investigation that indicated Corbisiero was innocent. But the wheels of justice jammed. For 17 years Corbisiero stayed in jail while his girl friend married, his son grew to manhood and his daughter went to South America. This year a lawyer got Corbisiero out. He was not bitter. With a $16.75 government check and his freedom, he was very happy.

MURDER VICTIMS, Modestino Guerriero (left) and his son Angelo, were killed by bandits. A captured bandit accused Corbisiero of a part in the crime.

KEY WITNESS, Father Aniello Conte, 86 years old, save that bandit Enrico Manzi, who died in jail, confessed in 1936 that Corbisiero was innocent.

AT NEW TRIAL Corbisiero argues that he was hawking bootleg alcohol at a village fair at the time of the murder and could not have taken part in it.

EMOTIONAL LAWYER, Augenti of Rome, who came to Corbisiero's help, cries that he was convicted through false testimony and pleads for his release.

MAKE BLADES LAST LONGER

with the super whisker-wilting action of any Mennen Shave Cream!

WHAT DO you want most in a shave cream—? Easier shaves? More comfortable shaves? Cleaner, closer, longer-lasting shaves—?

THEN—you want one of the 3 shave creams that make even the best razor blade last far longer . . . Here's why:

IF YOU'VE ever used tools, you know that hard, tough materials dull sharp cutting-edges far faster and sooner than soft materials. Your beard is no exception. Mennen Shave Creams make blades last longer by making beards softer—easier to cut. Which, of course, also means a cleaner, easier shave in every way — even in the "Awkward Zone" under your chin where the hairs grow every which-way!

PROVE IT - AT OUR RISK!

Test how many good shaves you are getting now from a single blade. Dry blade after each use. Make the same test with Mennen. If you don't get more shaves per blade, mail us the unused portion of the tube for a full purchase price refund! Try this "show-down" test tomorrow morning... for, remember: the beard-softening action that best saves your blades, is best at saving your face, too.

Scouts in record numbers pray, act—and eat

From 48 states and 23 foreign countries 45,000 Boy Scouts and 5,000 leaders converged upon the Irvine Ranch near Los Angeles for the best-attended jamboree in Scout history. They lived for a week in a town of 30,000 tents, swam in the Pacific, built fires, cooked their own meals, tied knots and swapped incessantly. They put on a costumed pageant which told about the winning of the American West on a grandiose scale, using a thousand war-painted Scouts in a single scene to act as Indians attacking a wag-on train. Like all boys in an age group averaging 13½ years, they are enormously—1,224 steers, 623,656 quarts of milk, 7½ tons of tomatoes and more than half a million eggs. The food bill came to $750,000.

REVERENT SCOUTS, some 30,000 strong, went to Protestant service. The boys are seated on the ground in natural amphitheater facing pulpit. Religious groups had separate services, including a small group of Buddhists.

KING FRANCIS I by Jean Clouet

Throughout his 32-year reign Francis I was absorbed in the Louvre and art. He had the eastle repaired and hired artists from all over Europe to work for him. One was the Flemish painter, Clouet, who about 1530 did this stylish portrait, now among the Louvre's most famous possessions.

THE LAST LAST LAST LOUIS LOUIS

ITS FABULOUS ART COLLECTION IS THE WORLD'S MOST FAMOUS

To the millions of tourists and art lovers who have tramped through the Louvre, and to the millions more who have only heard about it, the great institution in Paris is the most famous and fabulous museum in the world. The mere fact that it owns the two best-known works of art, the Mona Lisa and Venus de Milo, is reason enough for its widespread fame. Add to this its full complement of superlatives—biggest in gallery space, richest in value of art, one of the oldest in date of buildings—and the Louvre easily walks away with its title of world's top museum.

Drawn as much by its fame as by its art, up to 7,000 visitors a day pour into the Louvre. The collection they see numbers 275,000 works, of which 5,000 are paintings covering almost every period and nationality and representing the greatest masters in impressive quantities—16 Titians, 54 Rubenses, 21 Manets. In addition the museum owns some of the finest examples of antique and Oriental art, world-famous jewels like the 137-karat Regent diamond, royal relics of France from the spurs of Charlemagne to the crown of Napoleon and assorted oddities ranging from Corot's woolen bonnet to Napoleon III's top hat.

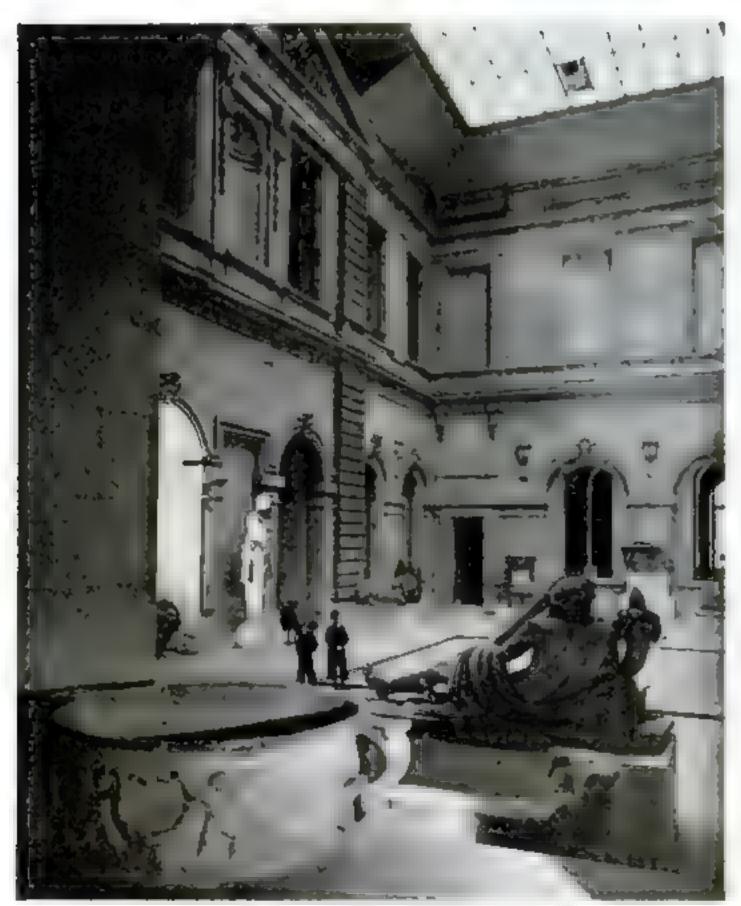

Big as the Louvre is—it covers and encloses 49 acres—it is still not big enough for its vast collection, part of which must be stored in its basement or farmed out to subsidiary museums. But the great highlights of the Louvre are on permanent display and this summer they are being shown in newly organized and redecorated rooms. But though the galleries have been refurbished, the trip through them is still long and arduous. Just to hit the highspots, a tourist must descend some stairs and walk down a long half to reach the Venus de Milo. He must go back through a gallery and up two flights of stairs to the Victory of Samothrace. Then he must climb more stairs, trudge through three rooms and halfway down the Grand Gallery to the Mona Lisa. And then, if he has any life left in his legs, he can strike out in any direction for a tour through eight miles of galleries and 5,000 years of world art.

VENUS DE MILO stands in dramatic solitude, and a tourist never forgets this first sight of her at end of long series of archways. Found in 1820, statue was bought for Louis XVIII.

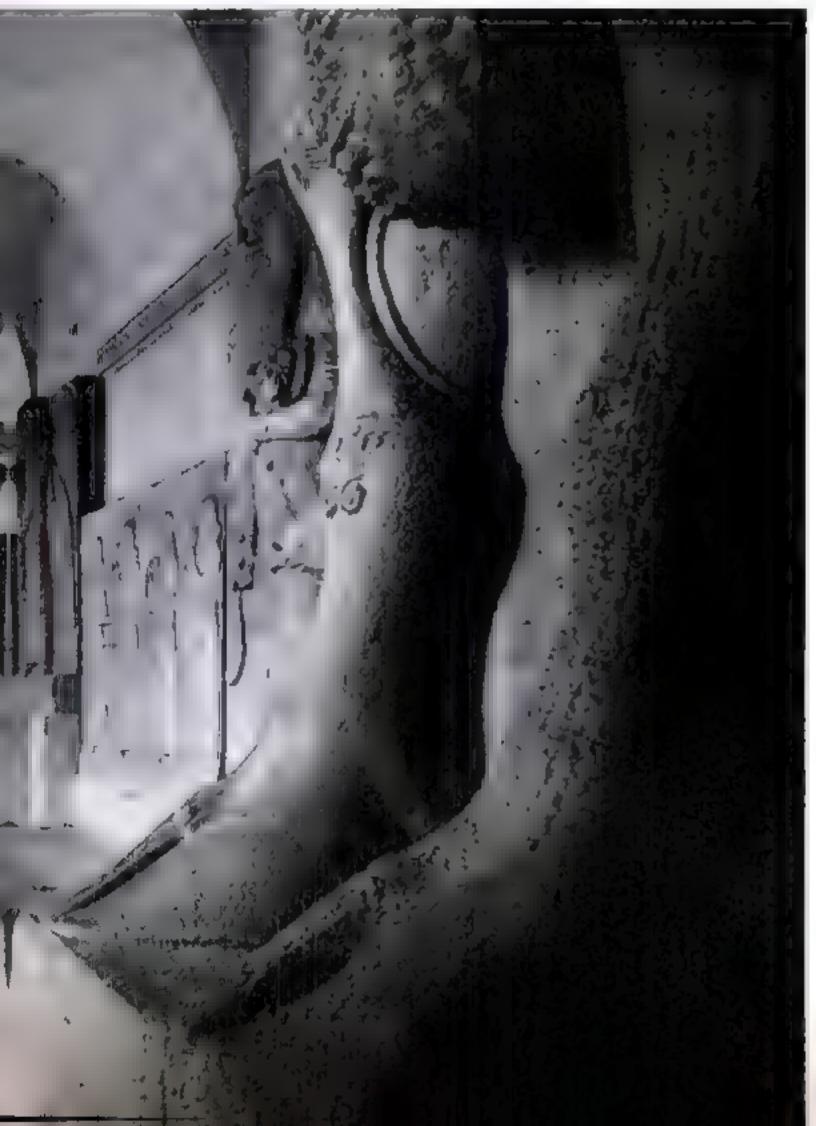

GRAND GALLERY, which is 900 feet long, is the most famous exhibition hall in the Louvre, Lined with 162 paintmgs of the Renaissance and the 17th Century, it contains some of the museum's most relebrated works, including the Mona Lisa and five other Leonardos, four Mantegnas, three Botticellis, eight Tihans, three El Greics, 10 Poussius. The large arched painting at lett is Fra Filippo Lappe's Firgin and Child with Saints and just beyond it Botticelli's Virgin and Child with Saint John the Buptist.

CLASSICAL STATUARY stands in a 17th Century courtyard that is one of 39 rooms devoted to Greek and Roman art. Doors in background lead to rooms which were once private apartments of the French queens.

MEDIEVAL ARCHWAY from French priory leads to a gallery displaying sculpture of Middle Ages. Many of these figures, along with stained glass and relies, were taken from churches and aboevs during Revolution.

MUSEUM HAS SURVIVED SEVEN CENTURIES OF WARS, WEDDINGS, FIRES AND FROLICS

The air of quiet order and propriety that invests the Louvre today gives no hint of the tumult of events that enlivened its halls for 700 years. Even its name has a sound of dignity that conceals its probable derivation from loup, the French word for wolf, indicating that the site was once the scene of medieval wolf-hunting. Although it has been a public museum officially for only 150 years, the Louvre became a headquarters of French history and a treasure house of art from the moment it was built in the late 12th Century. Designed as a fortress, it was a repository for the finest possessions and the foremost prisoners of the king.

In the 14th Century, King Charles V decided to turn the fortress into a royal residence. Hiring a battalion of architects, masons and decorators, he transformed the fortress into a storybook castle of spires and turrets, with terraces, trellised gardens and a menagerie. Here he assembled his collection of jewels, gold chalices, enamels and a remarkable library of illuminated manuscripts. These valuable items vanished from the Louvre in 1415 when the English, after their victory at the Battle of Agmcourt, occupied Paris and plundered the palace. By the time Francis I came to the throne in 1515 the Louvre had fallen into decay and he ordered much of it torn down. Parisians were sorry to see the fortress-castle go. "What a pity," one wrote. "It was very beautiful, high and strong and well suited to imprison men of great renown." But Francis, a man of discerning taste and insatiable interests, was one of the Louvre's great builders. He commissioned leading architects to construct a new Louvre and he accumulated art works which became the nucleus of the museum's great collection. Four Leonardos, including the Mona Lisa, and six Raphaels are among the prized works which came down to the Louvre from the art-loving king.

IN 1785 courtiers attended a show of paintings which crammed walls of the Salon Carré.

In the years that followed, the Louvre was the setting for balls, banquets, marriages and massacres. There, in the year 1558, Mary Stuart, future Queen of Scots, was wed to the Dauphin. On St. Bartholomew's Day in 1572, during the massacre of the Huguenots, victims trying to escape through the Louvre's halls left their bodies and blood to stain its floors. Under Henry IV, around 1600, the Louvre swarmed with activity. In the now famous Grand Gallery, which took 13 years to build, gala banquets were held. Below the gallery were housed the Gobelin tapestry workshops, along with hundreds of artists and craftsmen who were given free quarters.

When Louis XIV came to the throne, he concentrated on building the Louvre's art collection but abandoned the palace itself to the Parisians, who quickly moved in, setting up shops, stalls and hovels in the courtyard and unfinished wings. The nobility took over the royal apartments, remodeling them to suit their whims by ripping out wood panels, defacing the ceilings and opening up skylights in the roof. Soon the Louvre became a place of infamy where criminals Tound refuge and prostitutes carried on a brisk trade. These conditions continued until after the Revolution when officials of the new republic took over the palace and declared it a public museum. Augmented by treasures that had been confiscated from nobility, churches and monasteries, the Louvre's collection was soon vastly enriched by the conquests of Napoleon who in 1797 wrote that he had "made a good harvest . . . of all that is beautiful in Italy," and who continued to reap everything of value in his path through Europe. While enriching the Louvre, Napoleon also used it for state celebrations, kept a private suite there and turned one of the halls into a riding ring. After Waterloo, however, the emperor lost his suite and the Louvre lost some 4,000 items of loot which the Allies restored to their homelands. But it still kept much of the captured art.

The turbulent years that followed brought little change to the Louvre until the Franco-Prussian War in 1870, when the Grand Gallery was turned into a gun factory. Next year part of the Louvre was burned during riots over the establishment of the Commune. But its possessions, now greatly expanded through donations and archaeological expeditions, were saved. Since that time, the Louvre has enjoyed comparative peace, broken only by the world wars when the collection was sent into hiding around the countryside in a mass dispersal that, for a few years, turned the whole of France into a sprawling art museum.

IN 1939 paintings were removed from frames and sent away for safekeeping during the war.

THE LACEMAKER by Jan Vermeer

The art of Holland's Jan Vermeer, popular in his lifetime, was forgotten soon after he died in 1675. His paintings lay neglected until 1842 when a Frenchman in Delft "discovered" Vermeer and launched a vogue for his work. A busy search for his peaceful, luminous scenes began and when The Lacemaker turned up in 1870 it was quickly acquired for the Louvre.

MADONNA WITH ANGELS by Cimabue

During his own lifetime the 13th Century Florentine Cimabue won lasting fame as a great innovator—the first to produce a lifelike effect in the faces and figures of his paintings—but only a few of his works managed to survive later centuries. One of these was preserved in a church in Pisa where the artist had spent his last years creating mosaics for another church. When Napoleon invaded Italy, he claimed the painting as a prize of war and in 1799 sent it off with other booty to the Louvre.

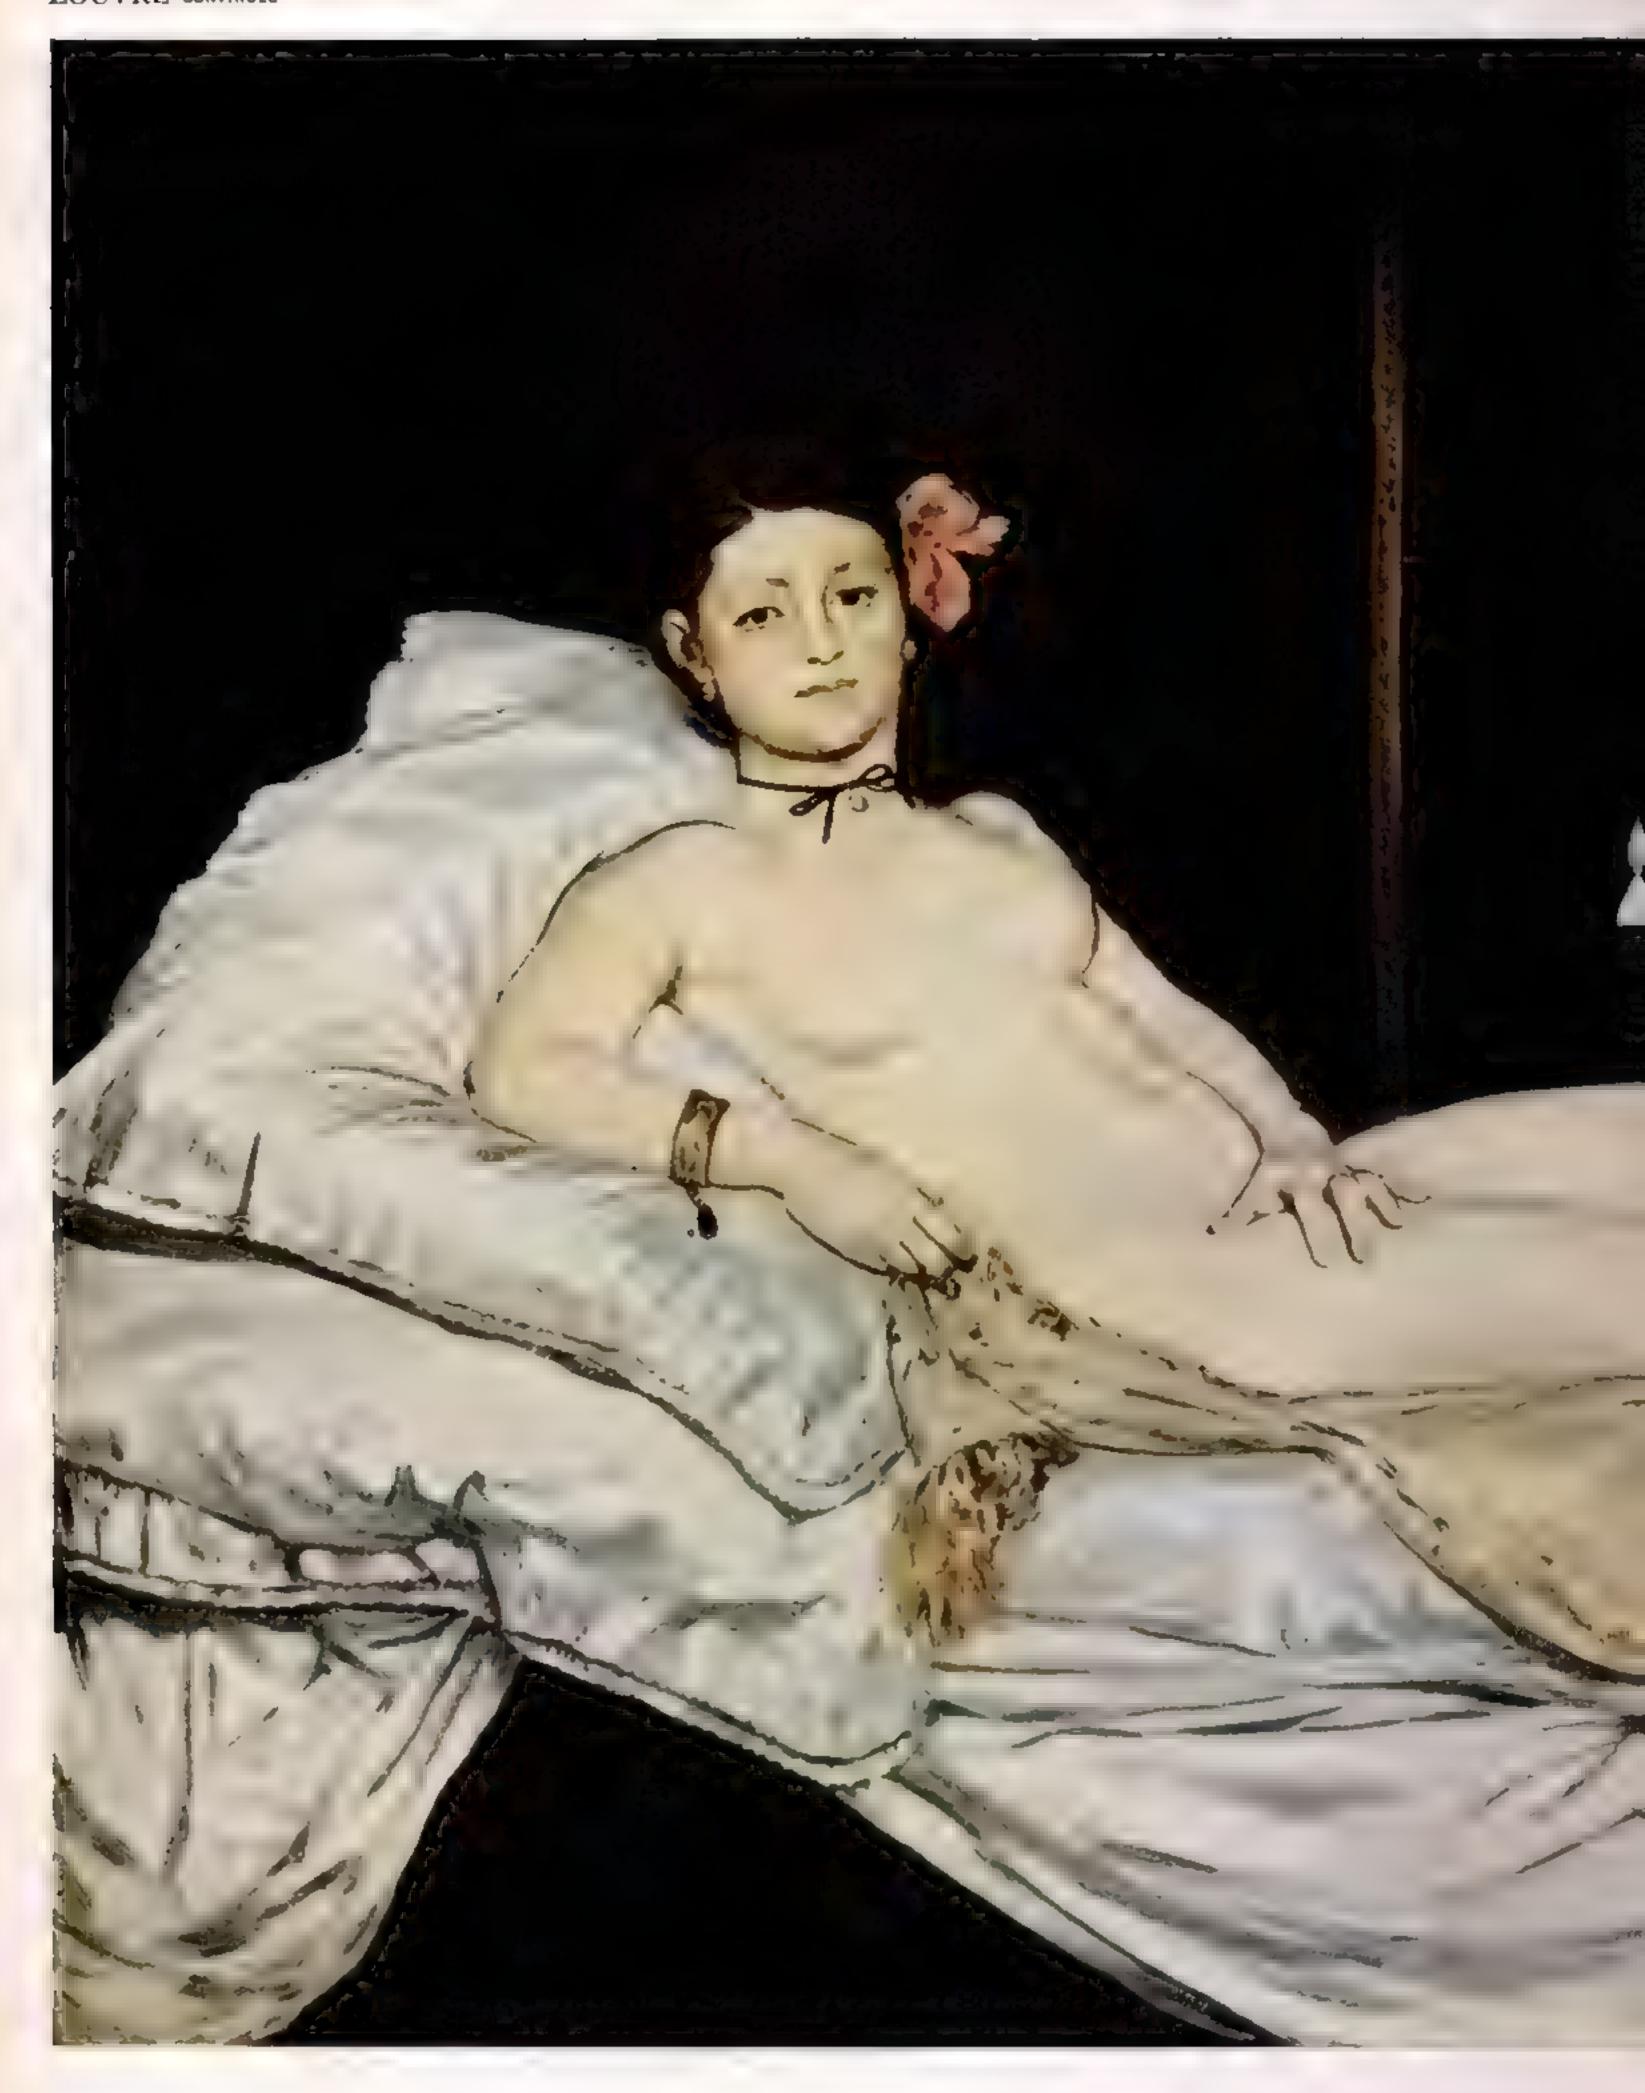

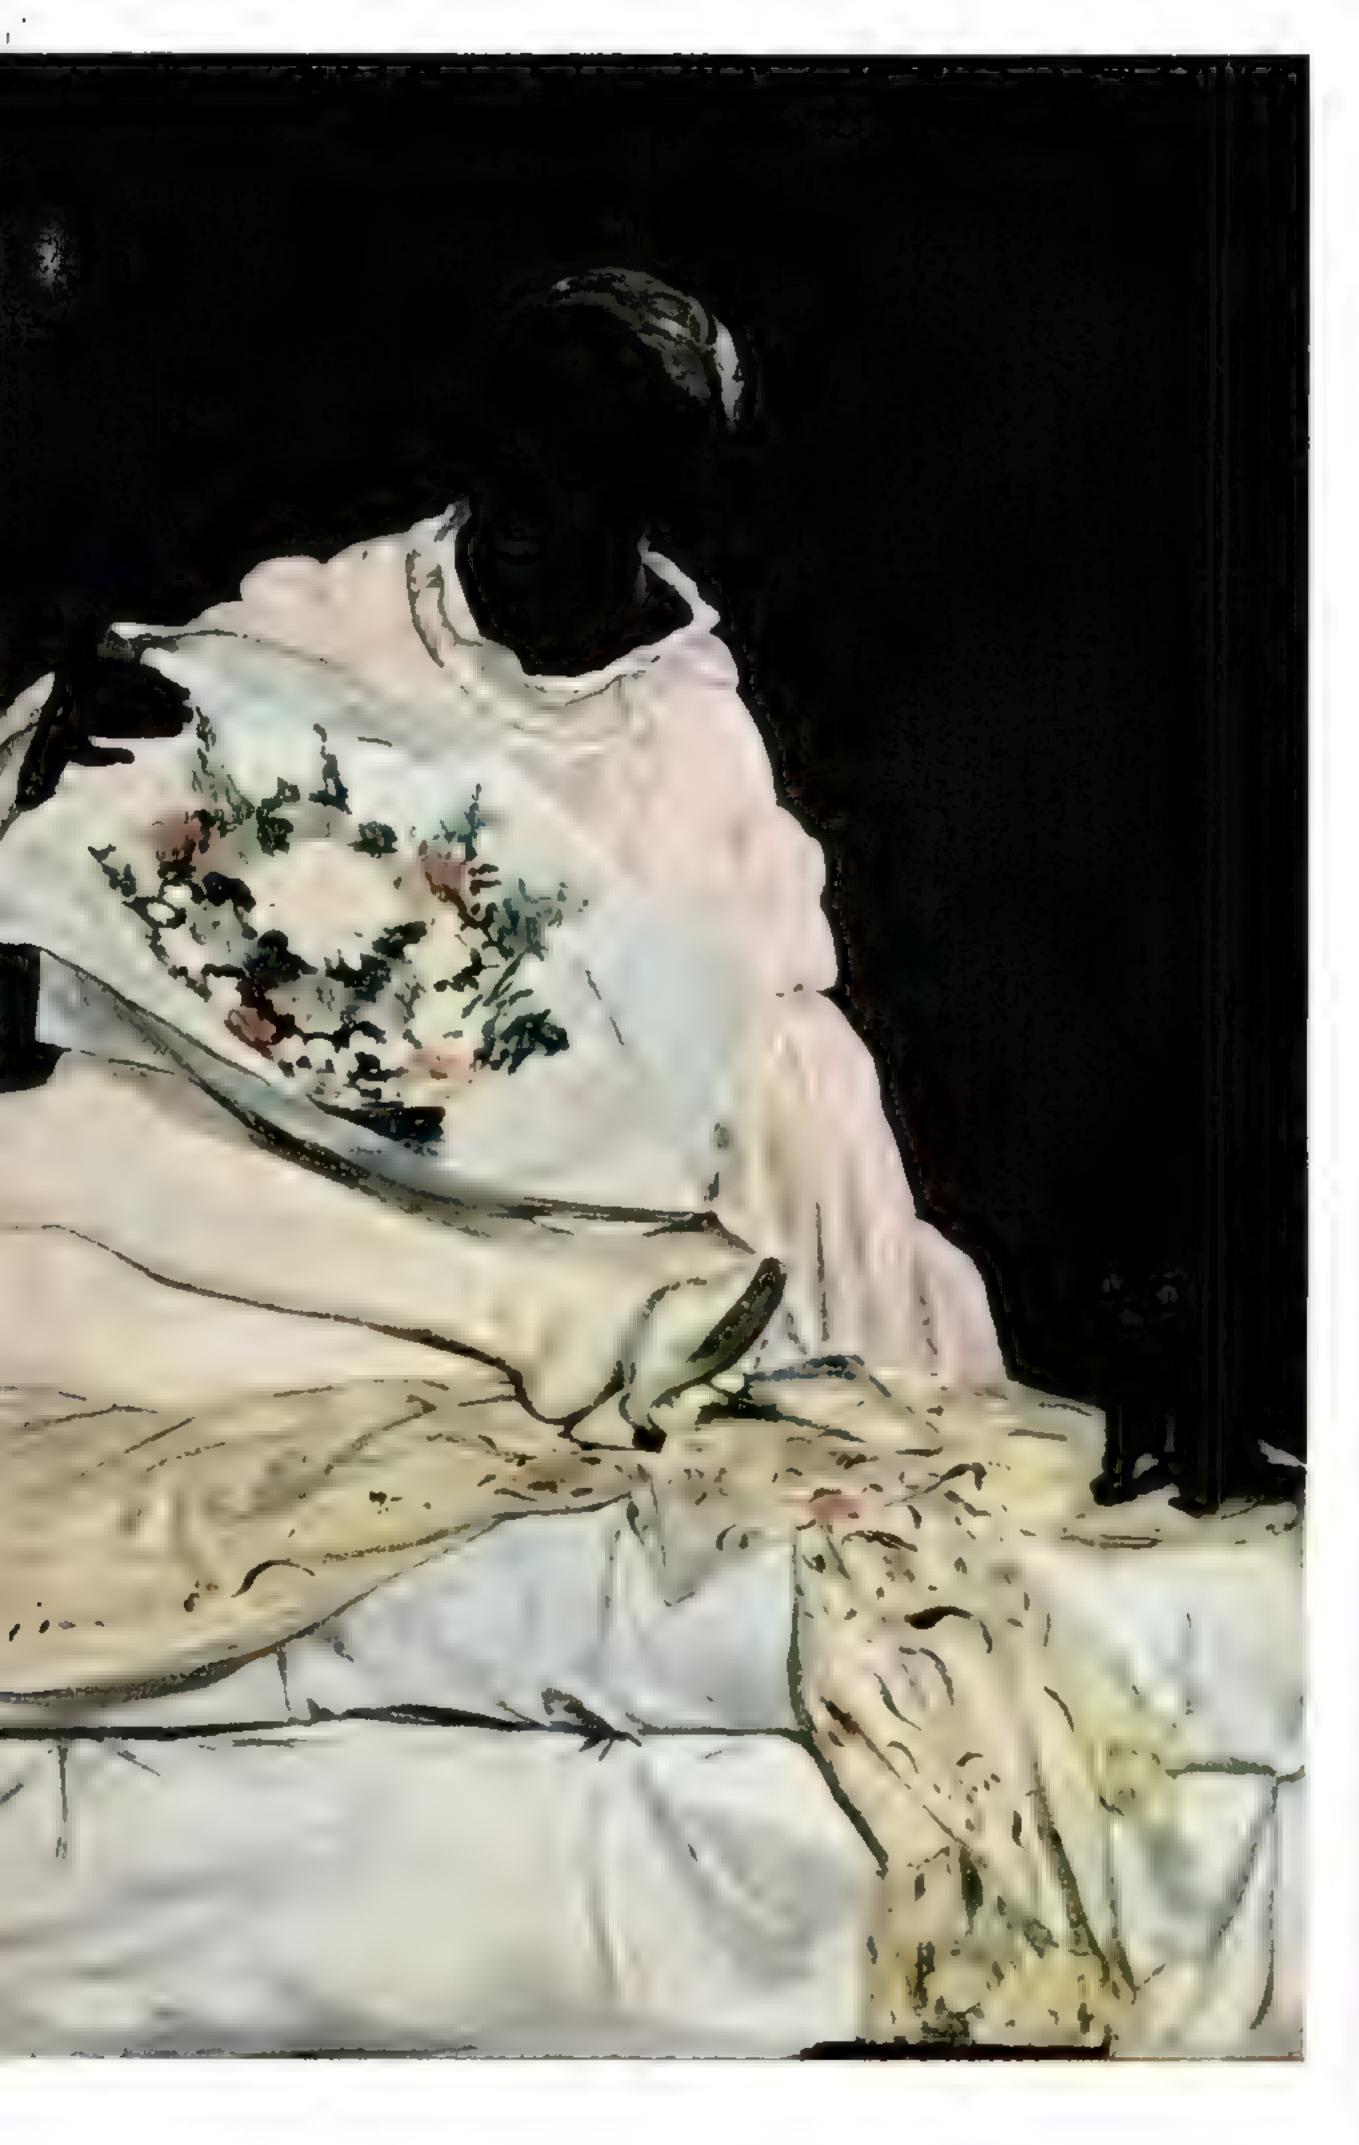

THE CRUCIFIXION by Andrea Mantegna

In his campaign through Italy, Napoleon discovered a majestic alterpiece in a church in Verona. Made up of six panels, it was by the 15th Century Italian, Mantegna. Napoleon carried the alterpiece back to France, but after Waterloo the main panels were returned to Verona and only the Crucifixton remained in the Louvre.

PIETA OF AVIGNON by Unknown Artist

The stark mournful scene at left was virtually unknown 50 years ago. For more than four centuries it had hung obscurely in a monastery in Avignon, its painter forgotten, its surface tracking and uncared for. Brought to light in 1904, it was immediately hailed as a great landmark of French art, was bought for the Louvre.

OLYMPIA by Manet

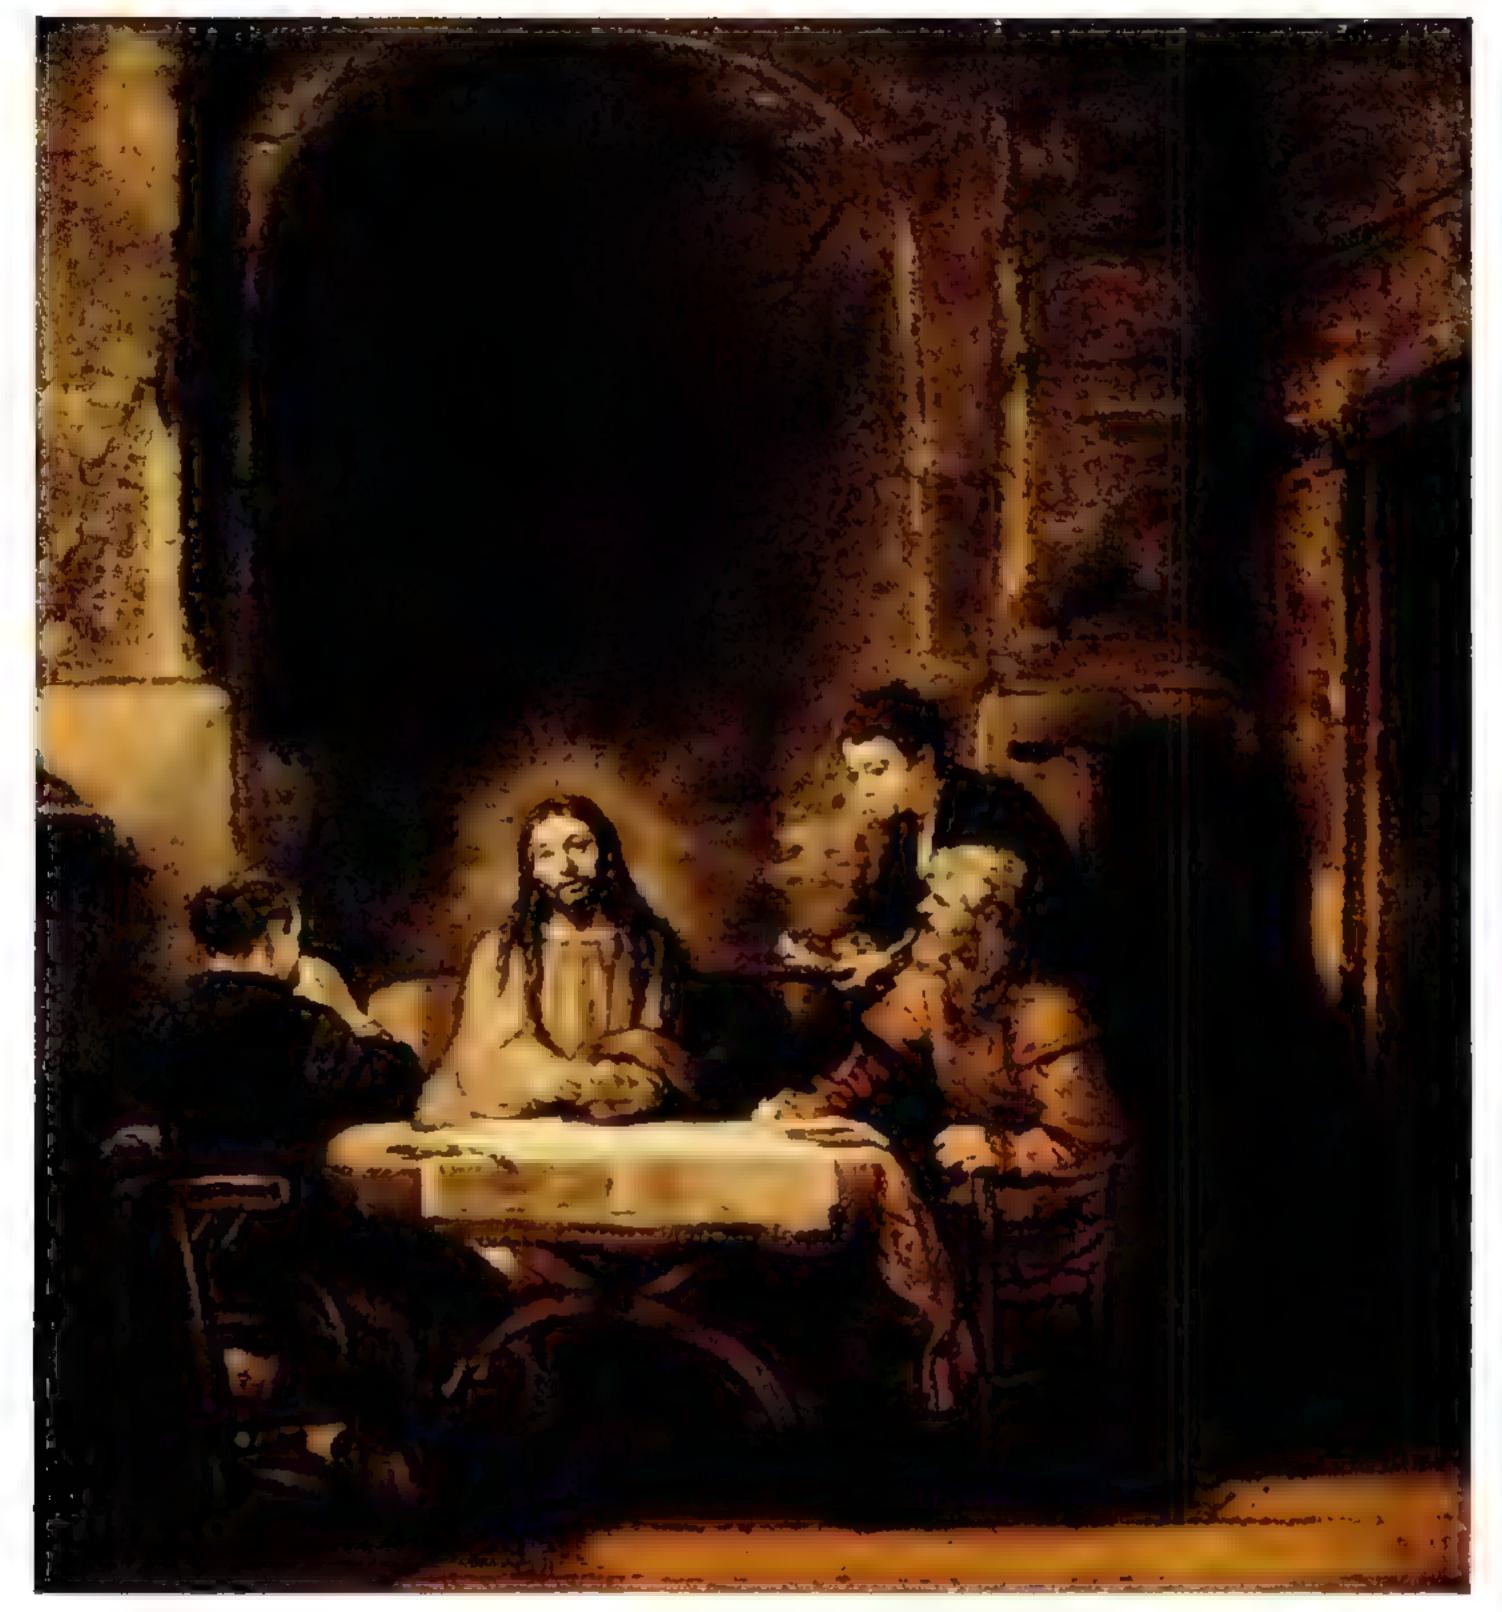

From the time it was painted until the day it entered the Louvre some 50 years later, Manet's Olympia prompted a continuous storm of abuse and controversy. Exhibited for the first time in 1865, it drew such taunting crowds that a police guard had to be stationed around it. Critics laughed at the "yellow-skinned odalisque-a wretched model picked up heav-en knows where" and even artists complained that the nude looked like something on a deck of cards. The painting remained unsold in Manet's lifetime. But six years after his death, in 1883, the French Impressionist Monet and other artists collected enough money to buy the painting for the nation. Even then the French art officials were loath to accept it. They relegated it to another museum until Premier Clemenceau, in 1907, ordered it to be hung in the Louvre.

THE BOHEMIAN by Frans Hals

The roguish smiles and come-on glances that enliven the portraits of Frans Hals were a familiar part of the tavern world which the artist frequented. A heavy drinker, Hals was inclined to escape the worries of home life and his family of 10 children in the company of reveling cavaliers and buxom, carefree girls like the Bohemian, whom he painted around 1625. By the time he died in 1666, at the age of 82, Hals had recorded the features and fashions of his contemporaries in some 300 paintings.

MADAME RECAMIER by Jacques Louis David

■ As the leading French painter at the time of Napoleon, it was inevitable that David should be chosen to paint the leader of French society, Madame Récamier. He began the portrait in 1800, representing his sitter as a Roman matron in classic gown and hairdo. The capricious Madame Récamier did not take to this image of herself and soon refused to pose. David abandoned the painting, but by 1826, when it was bought by the Louvre, it was already acknowledged as one of his finest works.

CHRIST AT EMMAUS by Rembrandt van Rijn

By 1648, when he painted the picture above, Rembrandt's increasingly dark and brooding art had steadily lost favor with the public. But his unwavering friend, Jan Six, appreciated the somber yet radiant scene in which Christ, at Emmaus, reveals himself to his disciples by blessing their bread. Six obtained the picture for his home where it remained for over a century. In 1774 it was purchased by King Louis XVI for the royal collection of France. Today it is one of 23 Rembrandts in the Louvre.

OFFICER OF THE IMPERIAL GUARD by Géricault

A passion for horses led Théodore Géricault to quick auccess as a painter and abrupt death at the age of 33. His tempestuous portrait of a heutenant on a rearing horse was the hit of the Salon of 1812. Twelve years later Géricault was thrown from a horse and died from a spine injury. The same year the canvas above was bought by the future king, Louis Philippe.

NEW TISSUE STANDS UP TO STICKY WEATHER USE

NEW "WET STRENGTH" SCOTTLES blot a damp brow dry without crumbling, without unpleasant linting

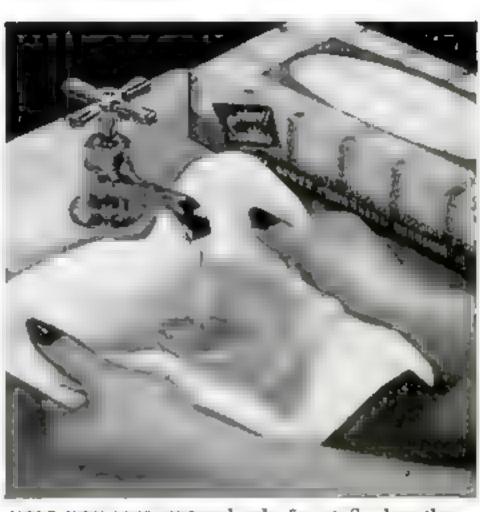

Bathers, sports lovers, brow moppers hail the new "wet strength" Scotties

Take New Scotties to the swimming pool or beach and use one for those first hearty after-swimming blows. Or on a really humid "dog day" keep New Scotties handy to mop your glistening brow. You'll get first-hand proof of how this amazing new tissue stands up under the toughest hot weather conditions, how it absorbs wetness and does not crumble or shred.

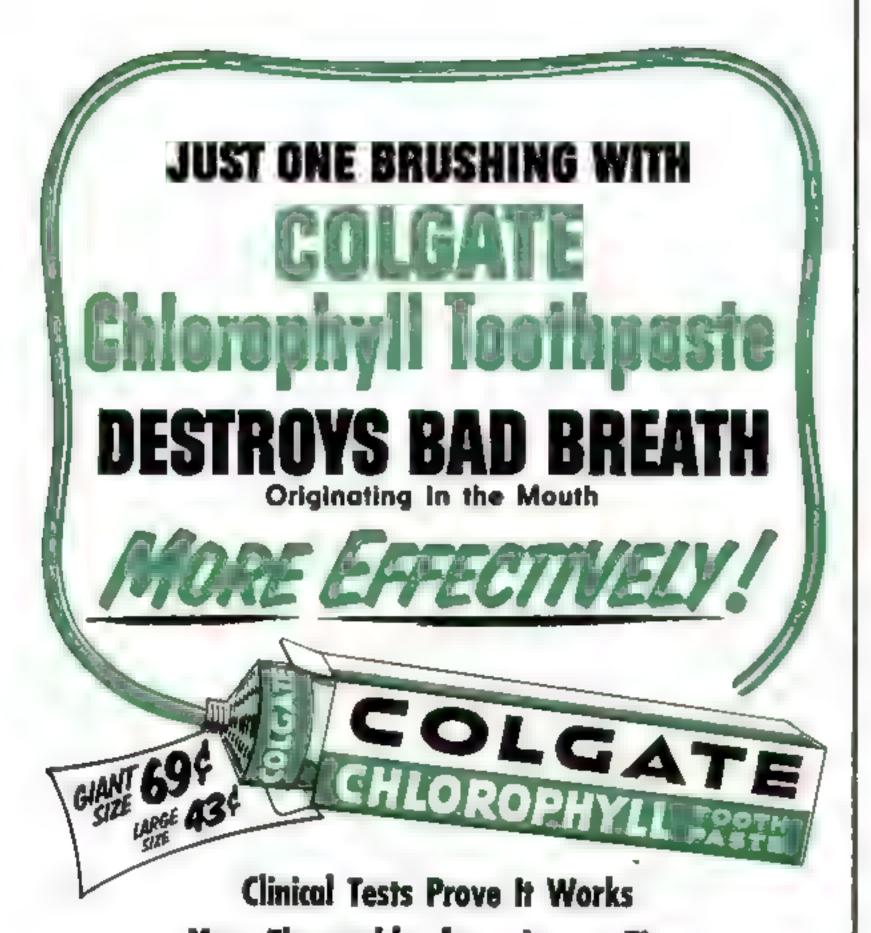

Yet for all their wonderful wet strength, New Scotties are softer than ever. They withstand the shattering sneezes of a hay fever sufferer, yet they are gently kind to his nose.

Use New "wet strength" Scotties like cloth handkerchiefs this summer for sports, at the beach or pool, at home. In the big box for the family or the handy vanity size, they are your very best tissue buy—another great Scott value. Scotties are thrifties.

DIRECTOR OF THE LOUVRE IS GEORGES SALLES

A HORDE OF WORKERS CLEANS AND GUARDS

On and behind the scenes at the Louvre, a staff of more than 300 workers is kept busy caring for the 140 exhibition rooms and their assorted collections of art. Every morning before the museum opens, all the miles of floors have to be swept. Statues have to be gone over regularly with a vacuum cleaner. Four restorers keep close scrutiny on the Louvre's paintings, which they inspect with ultra-violet and X-ray machines. Five marble workers repair and check the 24,000 works of Greek and Roman sculpture. The electrical system, powerful enough to light a city of 30,000 people, is tended by eight men, who spend spare momenta working out new spothghting tricks for Venus de Milo or the Victory of Samothrace.

But the majority of the museum's employes are the 220 guards, all retired soldiers, who keep an eye on the steady flow of sightseers and the sizable crop of copyists who take over the museum halls. Although their days are generally uneventful, they have been enlivened by the slashing of The Angelus in 1932 and the looting of some royal diadems. Most notorious of all such troubles was the theft of the Mona Lisa, which in 1911 was cut out of its frame by an Italian, who stayed in the Louvre overnight and walked out with the rolled-up treasure the next morning. It was two years before the painting was recovered.

When it's got to be really white—use Rinso with Solium

What a wonderful way to go down to the sea wrapped in a beach of it that's as daz zlingly white as the sun bleached sands. And why do you suppose this girl looks so gloriously tanned? Simply because her coat is really white, not halfway white.

Are your clothes really white? Many smart gals depend on Rinso with sorium to work wonders with a white wash. Believe it or not your sheets and pillowcases look whiter after they have been washed in Rinso with sorrow than when they were brand new in fact, you'll find that your wash shows the wonderful effects of soldom even before it is fully dry.

You can safely wash almost any fabric in Rinso-not only your cottons, as you'd expect, but the new synthetic fabrics like dacron, orlon and nylon.

And, don't forget, Rinso costs you less-you usually pay about 20% less for Rinso soap than for most of the other washelay products. Why? Simply because it now costs us less to make Rinso—and we pass this saving on to you.

Oh, yes—one thing more: Rinso is guaranteed with pride by Lever Brothers Company, 390 Park Avenue, New York 22, N.Y.—guaranteed to get your wash whiter than new, or your money back plus postage.

EUROPE ON LESS THAN $28,411

Mauldin finds it cheaper now than as a 'guest' of Uncle Sam but it is still hazardous going by BILL MAULDIN

THE last time I toured Europe it cost the government approximately $28,411, a figure I arrived at by dividing $350 billion by the number of men under arms. Now, 10 years later, it occurred to me that I might be able to make the same trip in considerably more comfort and at less cost by traveling on my own. This summer I set out to try, heading for England first.

After checking through Her Majesty's customs at London airport, where the officers were tolerant and friendly and put my baggage through unopened—their only searching questions concerning how much money in dollars I was carrying—I hailed a taxi driver standing beside a high, narrow, time-mellowed conveyance with patent-leather fenders.

"Sorry, sir," he said, tipping his cap. "I have a flat skin."

Startled as much by his Old World courtesy as by his strange malady, I stepped closer to see where he was flat and realized it was his left rear tire.

A delivery truck pulled up and the driver clucked sympathetically at the cabbie.

"Hard luck," he said. "Need a tool?"
"No, thanks awfully," said the cabbie.
"They're running a spare over from the garage."

A police car came by and the cops asked the cabbie if he would like them to call his garage. He said no and thanked them too.

Staggered, I took another cab and went to a hotel I'll call Smith's, a staid old establishment near Piccadilly which has for centuries catered to respectable squires in from the counties. It had been recommended to me as being typically London and uncluttered by Americans. I had the illusion I was going to duck my countrymen and see Europe as it really is. The fact is that Europe is really full of Americans and if you're going to see it you're going to see it you're going to see them, but I didn't know that yet.

As a venerable bellboy, in a shiny maroon swallowtail coat with wisps of white hair protruding above his high wing collar, creaked away under my typewriter and suitcase, I got into trouble trying to read the taxi meter and figure out the mess of pence, ha'pence, thrupence, shillings and half-crowns in my hand. The sponsors of my wartime tour had not seen fit to route me through England and these money mysteries were new to me.

"If you'll allow me, sir," said the cabbie, and he started picking the fare out of my hand. In any other country, including my own, I'd have expected to lose not only the money but my forearm as well. But after the display with the cops and the truck driver at the airport, and after the ride to London, where this fellow hadn't used his horn once in the thickest of traffic, I would have trusted a London cab driver with life itself. He took a few coins, I added a modest tip, and he thanked me so graciously that I wished I had back all the quarters I've plunked into the outstretched palms of Mr. Checker's and Mr. Yellow's hirelings over the years. I didn't stay in London long enough to find out if all cabbies are like that. I would like to think so.

When I had inspected my room in Smith's, I went to the desk and asked if I could change to one with bath. Here I got my first taste of what Mr. Stephen Potter, an Englishman, calls Lifemanship in his many books devoted to teaching the delicate art of putting a man on the defensive. It is done with tonal shadings and facial expressions as well as with words. All the clerk in the white tie at the desk said, after a long pause and a lifted brow, was this:

"Sorry, sir. Nothing like that available at the moment. We are not a new hotel."

Somehow, he made a virtue of no bathrooms. He conveyed to me that rooms with private baths are where the nouveaux riches go, where Americans go. A proper gentleman in a proper old hotel does not get soiled. I slunk upstairs to the public bath, which was demurely hidden in a garret, and added one more ring to those left in the tub by previous users who would no more have deigned to note their rings than to have needed the wash in the first place. Happily, the tub was deep. It had only a foot of headroom under the slanting attic ceiling. The British have claimed we Americans think only of our plumbing. I confess I thought a lot about it at Smith's.

Like a good tourist, hunting the native in his lair, I went looking for a pub. In a place called The Horse and Waggon was a proper type, with bowler and umbrella, ordering half-and-half at the bar. Wishing to be companionable and to learn all about England and its ways, I ordered half-and-half, and sought to open conversation immediately.

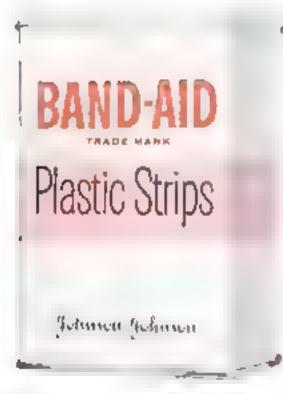

Half-and-half turned out to be half beer and half brew, and my friend at the bar ignored my opening remark about the weather being cold for late June. He buried his face in one of those lurid London newspapers which may be responsible for the city's general good manners by providing the ugliness in men's souls with a regular printed escape valve. Mccarthy do next?; and surrender, damn you!!, this last in connection with a fugitive rapist.

Hurt by the rebuff and not caring for the warm brew, I ordered whisky and found out too late the man with the paper had been just waiting for a gambit, or ploy, as Potter calls it.

"I suppose you'll be wanting ice with that," he said.

I started to answer yes, and add that I just took a bath in 30 gallons of hot water and liked white sidewall tires, but checked myself in time. No use playing into his hands.

My friend tapped the McCarthy headline. "Quite a fellow you've got there," he said.

He'd sized me right and ployed me well. If I protested that I didn't like McCarthy any more than he did, I would be offering an unsolicited opinion about my country's internal affairs to a foreigner. Even the bartender would be embarrassed for me. Besides, the man hadn't said he didn't like McCarthy. Any step I took would be a stumble, I could only wince. Now he gazed at me with deep sorrow. Chap like McCarthy on the loose, these Americans have to watch their tongues every minute. Pity. Promising young country for a while too.

I pointed to the atom bomb headline.

"Hogwash," I said.
"Beg pardon?"

"They've disproved that stuff about the weather," I said.

"Fine. Good show."

Back at the hotel I ran into Mr. and Mrs. George Bottle, from Texas, and their 18-year-old daughter, Barbara. I kept crossing their paths all over Europe. All the names in this piece, by the way, are fictional, even if I can't say as much for their owners. The Bottles had come to Smith's, as I had, to escape other Americans. It turned out at least half of the registered guests were in the same category. The secret of the hotel's success seemed to be in letting all the Americans see as little of each other as possible.

George Bottle was furious because the bar had just closed. "I haven't had a drink since I got to this town," he said. "Wife here has me out from early morning till 2 o'clock going through places like the Tower of London. We get finished and the pubs are closed. She makes me drive her out to the country to look at one of these stately homes where the Earl of Ballywax is paying his income tax by collecting admissions at the door, and by the time we eat and get back the pubs are closed again."

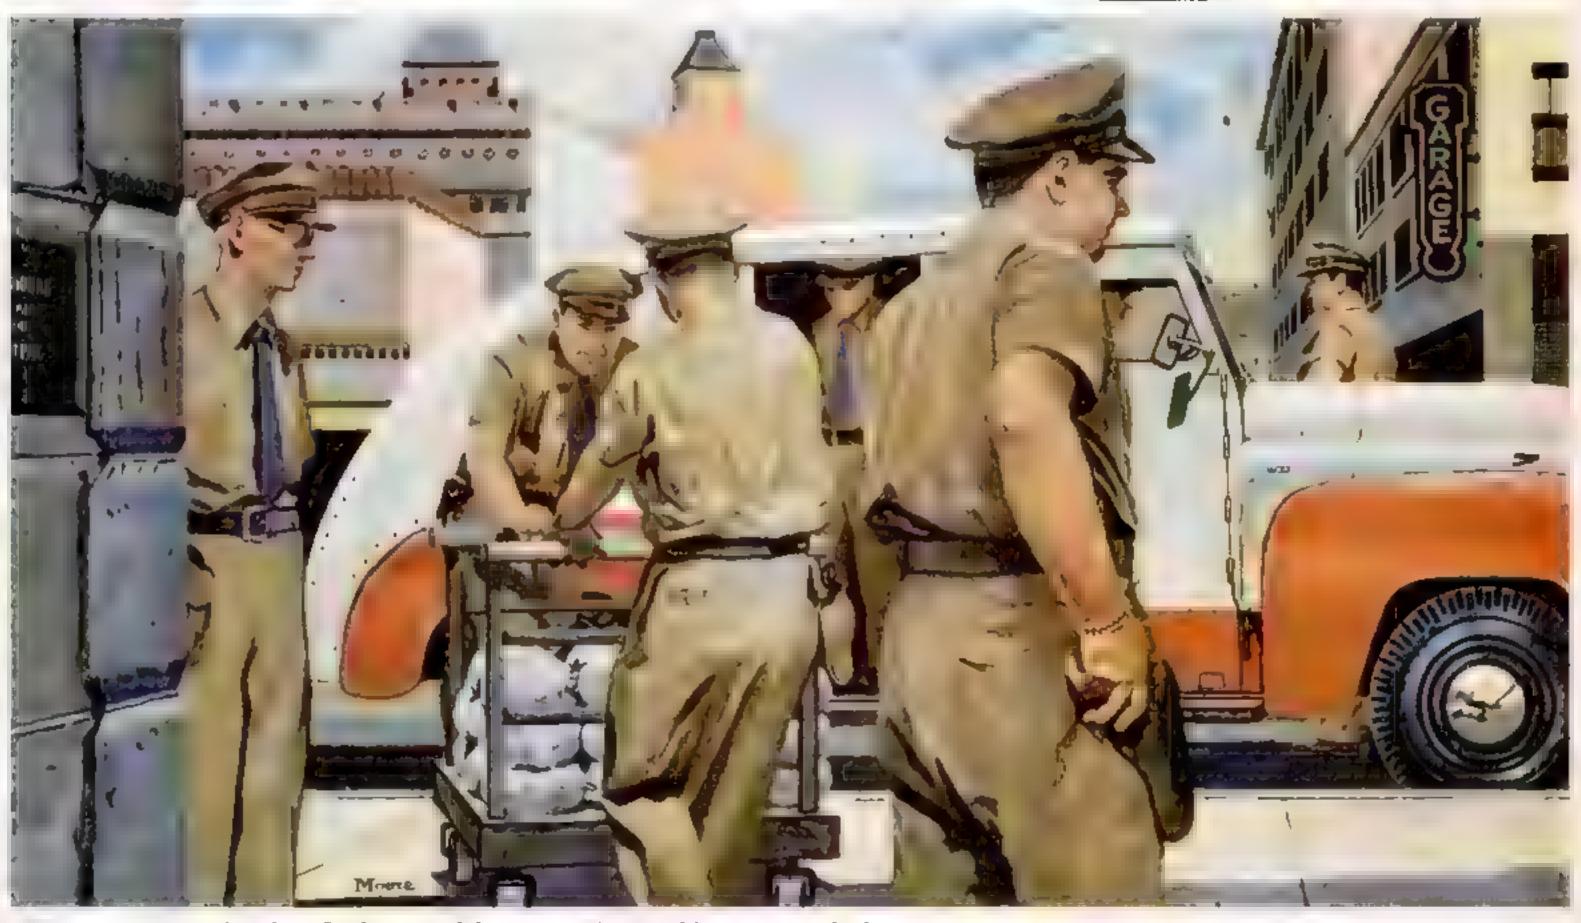

Mrs. Bottle was also upset. She and Barbara had just been to Piccadilly for a little stroll, and some strange woman had rushed up to them and told them to get the ruddy hell off her beat or she would have their gizzards out.

"I think she was crazy, that's all," Barbara said. "Daddy, let's go to Paris. You promised we'd go to Paris right away. London's so musty."

The Bottles lost Barbara in Paris. George told me about it when I found him, two weeks after leaving London, on the Champs-

Elysées, arguing at a newsstand about the price of a map of Paris. "Just because I came over here with a Cadillac," he said, "doesn't mean I'm going to pay double for everything."

I accompanied Bottle to a sidewalk case. As we waited 20 minutes for one of the five waiters to tear himself away from a customer in sez and dark glasses (Americans, even rich Texans and Hollywood luminaries living abroad to escape taxes, seem to run a poor third to Egyptians and Argentines as Paris' savorite spenders these days), George told me about Barbara's strange disappearance three days before. "We went down to the Embassy and got 'em out looking for her," George said. "They told us this sort of thing happens all the time. We found her holed up with a bunch of art students, running around in dirty T-shirts and Levis. She'd hocked her watch and bought an old typewriter and decided she was going to write stories about the new lost generation."

George thought he would let Barbara have her head.

"It'll give her something to brag about when she goes back to college," he said, "and besides, it's saving me money. God knows Mrs. Bottle is spending enough by herselt."

I found another tourist preoccupied with money matters a short time later, when I went to the comic opera to improve my mind and was seated alongside a Mrs. Binnie Flanker. I don't know how we Americans spot each other so easily. Maybe it's the loose-hung way we sit and stand. Anyway, by the middle of the first scene Mrs. Flanker, who was attractive though a bit weathered about the edges, had given me her life history, including the fact that she was thrice divorced and by careful budgeting of her alimony was able to travel about Europe, her reason being that she was fed up with American men because they don't know how to handle a woman. A French lady behind us kept making outraged shushing noises and finally Binnie turned and glared at her.

"I can't understand a word of this," Binnie said. "I don't know why I should sit here and pretend I'm enjoying it."

"Follow the music," I advised. "You can figure out the plot by just watching."

"I wish I'd brought my old silver fox from the States," Binnie said, looking around at the ladies' apparel. "Everybody's wearing old ratty ones and I could have got a good price for mine. What kind of exchange do you get on your dollars?"

I whispered that I wasn't sure.

"You're crazy. You know what I did this morning? I got 390 to the dollar. Of course, I had to exchange $300 in cash, not traveler's checks. And you can only do it with big sums like that."

This, I thought, is one time in Paris when the local team wins on manners. I turned apologetically toward the French lady, but she was leaning forward to Binnie. "I would have given you 400," she said. I left the girls exchanging addresses.

In a taxi which used the famous Paris projectile system (the vehicle is not steered, it is aimed), I followed the tourist trail to Pigalle. I was looking for a bit of wickedness. There are better shows on South State Street in Chicago, and on South State you can refresh yourself with salted peanuts at a dime a bag instead of flat "champagne" at $10 per bottle. Pigaile makes you feel like a frustrated Peeping Tom.

In a nightclub in Montmartre I heard a spirited conversation in English between a local inebriate and an American. The Frenchman started it.

"How can you live in a country which has no soul?"

"How can you live in a city full of money grubbers and boors?" "Aha, you are wrong; it is the American who thinks of money." "The American may think about it but the Frenchman gets it." "Your government is trying to buy my loyalty with dollars." "Haw! You should talk; you haven't got a government."

Taking an empty bottle by the neck and expecting momentarily to have to help my embattled countryman in the inevitable riot, I thought what a pity it is that they force you to be a chauvinist even if it isn't your nature. Then the opponents ordered a full bottle to lubricate their wits for the next bout, and I left the place.

Like every pilgrim to this crowded mecca of the American tourist, I carried a confidential address, given me by a well-traveled friend, of the "greatest little restaurant in the world. One of the rare bits of the real Paris left. Only a few tables, and the service is very slow, because M. Parégorique, the owner, won't hire waiters and is always running out to the kitchen to check the eel-peeling and sauce-making. He is an artist with food and if you smoke between courses or he doesn't like the way you comb your hair he just won't serve you. Only a few people know the place."

Sure enough, the restaurant was on a picturesque little street in a hidden part of Paris, as promised. The only trouble was that my taxi couldn't get near the place because the street was choked with Buicks, Lincolns, Cadillacs, Chevrolets and Dodges. And the service was slow, all right, not because M. Parégorique didn't have waiters but because the place was jammed to the rafters with U.S. citizens, mostly occupying themselves with glaring at each new compatriot's arrival. Art Buchwald, the Paris columnist, calls this "Americans' inhumanity to Americans," and points out that the only people in Paris who treat us worse than the Parisians do are ourselves.

M. Parégorique's food tasted all right. The bill for soup, meat, bread, half-bottle of wine and coffee was just under 5,000 france -about $15.

Outside, near the Sacré-Coeur, the great church on the hill which commands a fine view of all Paris, an elderly American couple, who looked as if this trip might be a celebration of their 30th or 40th anniversary, stood by a railing, close together.

"The most beautiful city in the world," he was saying.

"Where did you park the car, dear?" she said.

Salad and motor oil

WITZERLAND, after Paris, is a rest cure, a cup of bland hot chocolate after a cognac binge. A quieter, more respectable, more efficient place would be hard to find. Swiss hotels have pushbuttons in the rooms. Other hotels in Europe have buttons too, but when you press one in Switzerland somebody comes. If you push several buttons people collide in the corridor.

The Bottles were in Lausanne. They had recovered Barbara, who was still wearing Levis and a T-shirt and looked bored.

"Fun is fun," George said, "but she was beginning to take that egghead stuff seriously. Besides," he confided to me, "I am beginning to think some of those kids she was running with lived kind of Toose."

Mrs. Bottle said she liked Switzerland because it was the only place she'd found in Europe where she could eat salad without worrying whether the lettuce had been washed. George was happy because he'd found a Cadillac agency which was servicing his car.

Binnie Flanker was in the American Express office in Lausanne cashing some dollars.

"Boy, they sure have got stable currency here," she said. "Everybody offers me the same exchange rate." Binnie allowed she had found Frenchmen lacking in masculine aggressiveness and she was anxious to push on to Italy.

A pair of young honeymooners, Sidney and Alice Perry, were at my hotel. I had noticed Sidney briefly in a Paris sidewalk cafe when, not understanding Continental ways, he had almost slugged two Egyptians who were leering at his bride and a third who was leering at him. Perry was a Middle Western student of veterinary medicine. He hadn't wanted to come to Europe anyway, but Alice had her heart set on this tour, and her father had put up the money as a wedding present. Sidney liked Switzerland because people left them alone.

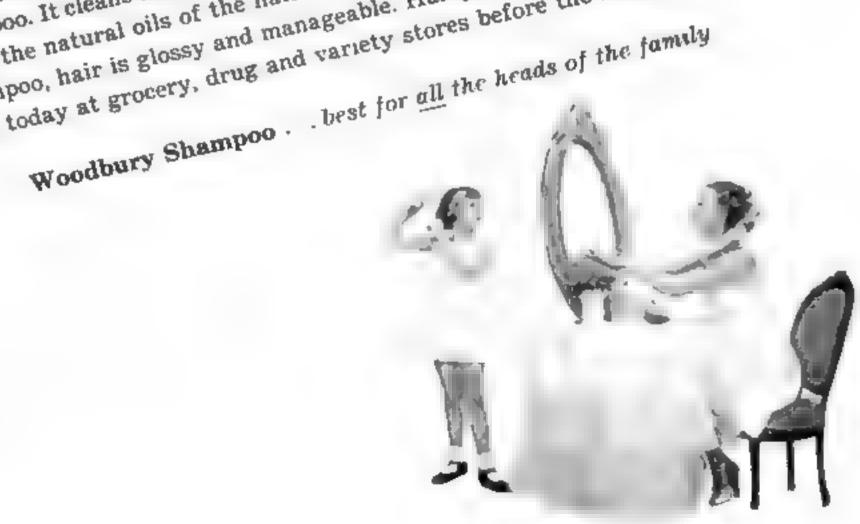

"You know," he said, "we don't even have to double-lock our door here. Everybody knocks before they come in. In Paris we had to stack furniture against the door to make people knock.

Otherwise they'd just barge in with a passkey."

I had been touring the fleshpots in Paris, she had been creeping inch by inch down the corridors of the Louvre and getting the best out of the city.

She found Switzerland too smug and conservative.

"They will never create masterpieces here," she said. "They don't suffer."

At this point in my travels I had a small car and Miss Muncy wanted to hitch a ride over the Simplon Pass. She was headed for the museums of Italy. I said I would be glad to oblige but was a married man. She laughed so hard she had to wipe her spectacles.

At the frontier the Swiss guard proudly assured us that every bridge, pass and approach to his country was mined and connected by wire to some centrally located switch so that at any moment they could be sealed off from the world. Miss Muncy replied that she couldn't care less. I lost her in Milan at sundown. I was pushing on south and she wanted to study the cathedral in the morning light.

In Florence I met an ex-soldier named Pete Hirshvogel, who was touring up the peninsula with his wife and showing her all the places where he'd fought in World War II.

"Somebody's been shoving the landscape around," he complained. "As I remembered the Anzio beachhead, I used to feel like a fly in the bottom of a cup, with those mountains hanging over me and an 88 sticking out of every bush. Driving over there from Rome last week, I told my wife I was afraid I'd get the shudders all over again just looking up at those awful mountains.

"'What mountains?" she said when we got to Anzio. I looked around and couldn't believe it. Way off in the distance was this range of peaceful-looking hills. Somebody's chopped them in half and moved them back ten miles."

Hirshvogel was pretty sad about one thing. "Near Livergnano," he said, "where we had a hell of a fight for about six months, I'd heard they put up a monument to my regiment. I took my wife to see it, and it was there, all right, but all grown over with weeds."

I saw it myself later. Not far away was another monument, of sorts, which Pete must have missed. It was a scarecrow some farmer had made out of an old G.I. helmet and jacket.

In Siena, George Bottle told me he'd had his first automobile accident in Europe.

"They're like mosquitoes down here," he said. "Everybody's on wheels. Those little motorcycles with whole families on them come charging out of the bushes on one side and a priest on motor-scooter passes you on the other side with his robes flapping in the breeze. The man who figures he has the right of way will tangle with a six-ton truck to prove it. The roads in Italy would be ankledeep in blood if they could figure out a way to make these heaps run any faster."

George had sideswiped an oxcart. Nothing serious, he said, just dented the side of the car and knocked the wheel off the cart. He'd settled on the spot. "Those damn carts have got no business on a public highway, anyhow," said George.

Near Genoa, Binnie Flanker was living in style, in a resort hotel overlooking a fishing village. Having noted that the village seemed well stocked with fishermen, I asked her if she'd reached the end of her long search.

"I hate it here," she said.

"Aren't they attentive?" I asked.

"Too damn attentive," she said. "They nuzzle. Italian men are the nuzzliest people you ever saw. They come up behind you and hang their chin on your shoulder and proposition you, just like that. Yesterday there was a man putting up one of those Communist signs calling us murderers and all kinds of dirty names. You'd think he'd have some pride, seeing I was an American, after putting up the signs, but no, he dropped everything and draped his chin on me."

"That's a shame," I said.

"I hear," she told me, "that in Spain they are as ardent as the Italians but more gallant."

"See you in Madrid," I said.

Passing through Monte Carlo on the way to Spain, I noticed a large, elegant building and asked a nearby Englishman if that was the Casino.

He nodded and studied me for a moment. I was driving a little open car, wearing a grimy sweatshirt, and my face needed washing.

"Why don't you go in, Yank?" he said.

"I can't looking like this," I said. "I thought you had to wear a dinner jacket."

"Ha," he said wryly, "they'll welcome you with open arms as long as you carry the almighty dollar." Few Englishmen seem able to say dollar without the prefix almighty.

Even at noon in the Casino the tourist-price roulette tables were packed, and sure enough, half the gamblers wore their shiritails out. It made the grand old place look just like any joint in Las-Vegas, Nev.

A fat German lady sat at one table and appeared to be the only big plunger. One of the tuxedoed attendants had placed himself at her exclusive service, spotting her bets with his little rake as she directed him, and getting new chips every time she pulled a fresh bale of 5,000- and 10,000-franc notes from her sturdy handbag. She was betting several thousand francs at a turn, scattering chips like hail over the board and glowering more and more as she lost. Nothing she did seemed to work out right.

Sidney Perry, whose bride had talked him into visiting the Casino on the way to Spain, was also fascinated by the German lady.

"One of the few encouraging things I've seen in Europe," he told me, "is the number of German tourists about. A lot of them are driving new cars and they seem fairly prosperous."

"Just like prewar," I said.

"You can't keep a good people down," Sidney announced.

"I'm afraid not," I said,

He looked hard at me.

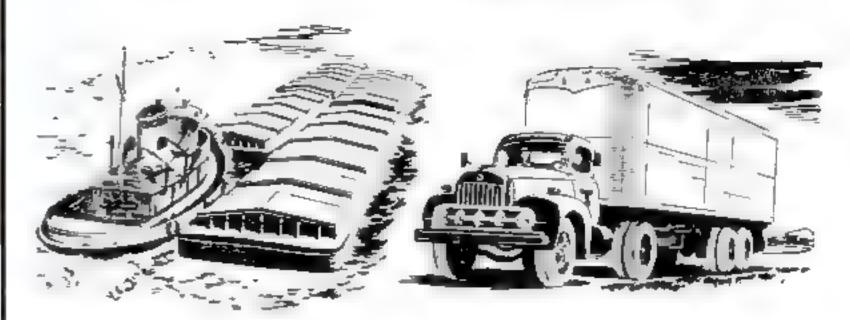

"You're a damned reactionary," he said. "That war is over. This is a new era. New friends, new enemies."

"Give me time," I said. "My gearbox has a slow shift."

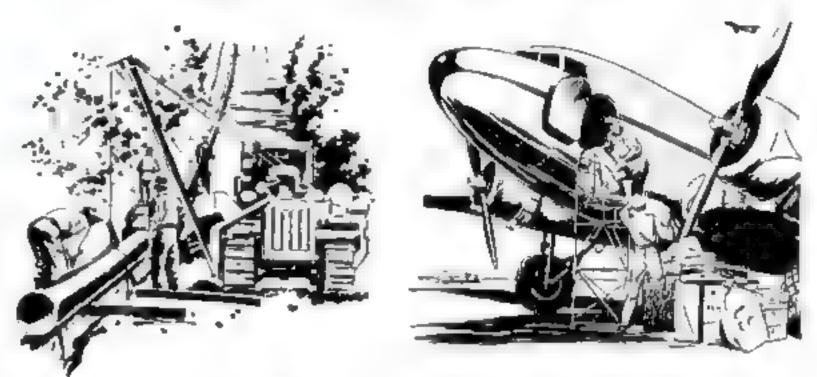

Cynthia Muncy finally got me into a museum, the Prado, in Madrid.

"You can't just pub-crawl all over Europe and not do something for your soul," she said.

ATHLETE'S FOOT

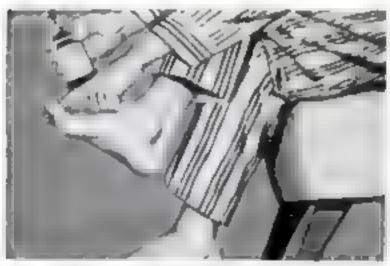

What it is How you get it How to get relief

Athlete's Foot is caused by parasitic micro-organisms. Left untreated, it can burrow under skin tissue, attack nerve endings, lead to disability. Severe case shown here requires doctor's care.

Raw cracks between your toes invite Athlete's Foot—especially in summer. When Athlete's Foot fungi infect, skin reddens, itches painfully, flakes off.

For rolled of Athlete's Foot symptoms, use Absorbine Jr. daily. Cool, soothing Absorbine Jr. kills all the Athlete's Foot fungi it can reach. Promotes healing of skin. To prevent re-infection, boil socks; don't share towels.

Absorbine Jr., original relief for Athlete's Foot, has been proven successful in relieving Athlete's Foot misery in 3 out of 4 cases tested. Available at all drug counters. Buy a bottle today.

deference to the Spaniards' strict sense of propriety about female garb. We all trooped into a small room containing a famous Velázquez painting and a murror, the idea being that when you look in the mirror the picture almost comes to life.

"Look!" cried Barbara, "3-D!"

"See?" said her father proudly. "Told you she'd get back to normal."

A day or so later I ran into Sidney and Alice Perry, who had just visited a cathedral where Alice, lacking either a hat or a hand-kerchief, had worn her gloves on her head. They had tickets for the bullfights, and I decided to go with them. My attitude toward the corrida falls somewhere between Hemingway and the A.S.P.C.A. So many Americans go to extremes one way or the other about this thing. Hemingway gets carried away on some kind of romantic cloud about it, and the A.S.P.C.A. gets all worked up about a piece of beef who's kept so angry he doesn't realize they're slowly bleeding him to death.

Once in a while something interesting happens at the cornda. We watched a crazy young fan jump into the ring with his shirt for a cape and get tossed higher than a kite. Whereupon there was a race for the body between the litter-bearers, who wanted to take him to the hospital, and the cops, who wanted to take him to jail. And there was a drunk picador who kept falling off his horse every time the bull charged.

By and large, though, such high points are spaced too far apart for me to become an aficionado. Sometimes you have to watch two whole bullfights before something like that comes up.

"It's uncivilized," Sidney Perry said.

"Listen," said Alice, "a country where you can hire maids for $5 a month and cooks for $7 is as civilized as I care to be."

"Well," said Sidney, relenting a bit at this, "I'll say one thing for the crowd here. They're impartial. They don't care who gets killed. Before I saw this I thought they discriminated against the bull."

I had drinks with the Bottles at the new hotel Mr. Conrad Hilton just opened in Madrid to catch the tourist trade. I don't know about the tourists, but the place ought to be very popular with local Spaniards because it will give them a chance to go abroad without leaving the city. Not even a congressman would find anything un-American about it. The menu, the bar and the decor are pure, classical Los Angeles, and well done too.

"I feel like I'm home," said Mrs. Bottle. "Air conditioning and everything. I'm not going to stir out of here until it's time to go back to the States."

Outside, along the wide, shaded street, Binnie Flanker passed in a taxi. After a few minutes she passed again, going the other way. She spotted me and invited me to join her.

"Cheapest taxis I ever saw," she said delightedly. "You can ride for miles on a few pennies. I've been riding taxis all day."

We had a nice sightseeing tour, the only trouble being that I never was able to figure out, from our driver's actions or those of other cars, whether in Spain they drive on the left side, as in England, or on the right, as in France and Italy. When two Spaniards approach each other in motor cars, one charges and the other does a reronica.

In Toledo one afternoon I wandered into a sidewalk cafe for coffee. There wasn't a sign of life in town, and I realized I had walked into the middle of a siesta, that holy time when entire populations sink into coma, causing ulcers to subside and the dinner hour to be shoved forward to midnight.

I sat at a table and waited half an hour for someone to bring coffee. Finally I snapped my fingers. A sleepy man appeared and spoke to me in English:

"You Americans are muv simpático, you understand me, but you try to crowd a hundred years into fifty."

"And you," I retorted, "try to stretch fifty years into a hundred." I thought I had won. When my coffee appeared an hour later I knew I had lost. Meanwhile, a few other violators of the siesta had appeared, among them a tall, rawboned English lady, who took a table near me, and the Sidney Perrys, who joined me. They said they were delighted to find how far their dollars would stretch in Spain.

The English lady's ears perked up when she heard Americans discussing money. Showing no sign of traditional British reserve, she asked us if we would be so kind as not to overtip when we left the cafe.

"Madam," said Sidney Perry, "I never overtip."

"Perhaps not by your standards," she said, "but I would like to say that Spain is the last refuge in Europe for many of us and now you Yanks have found it. I do hope you won't be overtipping and overpaying and spoiling things for everyone else."

"I suppose," said Alice Perry acidly, "that we'll drive wages up to terrible levels. Next thing you know, maids will be getting $7 a month and cooks will demand $10."

"I wouldn't put it past you, my dear," said the English lady. "You know," said Sidney to me, "at last I've figured out why the Russians are held in such awe everywhere. They never let tourists out and they never let 'em in. Man, the only way I'm ever going to get the respect due me as a 100% citizen of the most industrious, intelligent, inventive, red-blooded and beautiful country in the world is to throw my passport in the ocean, stay home, act mysterious and, instead of running around exposing myself, let everybody else wonder what the hell I'm up to."

I thought Sidney had a point there—until I got back to the U.S. "Been to Europe, hey?" a taxi driver said during the hair-raising trip from Idlewild airport to the Jersey side of the George Washington bridge. "Must be nice to get back to civilization!" Then he clipped me $14 for what should have been a $6 ride.

HAIR AND HATS STAY PUT WITH RESILIENT COMB

The still life above shows plain and fancy versions of a tenacious new gadget which secures hats and hairdos to ladies' heads despite high winds and the law of gravity. "Feathercombs" are made of highly resilient Swedish music wire, expand slightly as they are inserted, then contract to remain firmly in the wearer's hair. Devised by an advertising art director named Andrew Smith for his wife and his mother, the springy combs proved too good to keep under their own hats and are now being manufactured by the inventor. Decorated styles can be bought in department stores and unadorned ones, already sold in beauty shops, will be more generally available later this year.

You be the judge! Send your clothes to a drycleaner who uses Sta * Nu

THIS ENVELOPE BROUGHT MCCOMBE HIS NEW CITIZENSHIP

Become a Citizen

LIFE'S CAMERAMAN TELLS HOW HE TOOK NEW HOME

A few weeks ago LIFE Photographer Leonard McCombe received a registered letter (above) which filled him with deep pride. In it was the paper which certified that McCombe, born and brought up in Britain, was now a citizen of the United States of America. Looking forward to his new status, McCombe (right) also looked backward upon his seven years in America and the gradual change in his feelings which led him to adopt a new country. McCombe always carries a camera and on its film records his impressions and intimate reactions as naturally as another man does in his diary. His American pictures, mostly taken on scores of Life assignments, show his day to day moods and adventures, and from them McCombe has selected those on the following pages, which are accompanied by his own captions. They punctuate his progress from loneliness, when at the age of 23 he arrived in New York in 1946, to his period of discovery, when America began to seem an odd but fascinating place, to the years of active enjoyment of the new country, to the time when he finally felt he belonged here. McCombe begins his odyssey with a description of his first weeks in a sweltering New York summer.

"Things began to grate on me almost as soon as I got here. Hotel rooms were hard to get and there was a five-day limit; I must have lived in a hundred rooms before I got settled. The piercing, summer light gave me a continual headache. Something irritated me most of the time; the constant speed, the aggressive nasal whine, the wet heat, the bitter squint of the crowd, the assembly-line look of American life and the new crisis every hour."

FOR A CITIZEN'S SAGA, TURN PAGE

Loneliness

In my first weeks in America. I'd stretch out on my bed and try to recall a friendly moment during the day. There wasn't any. The heat was infernal. People got drenched without moving. Tension showed in twisted hands and peeled nail polish, I felt that people were drawing an unseen line on the air-don't cross-trouble over here. How far away is America when a man crosses his arms and sets his hps? Ed never seen men eating ice cream (that was only a children's treat in England). They duln't seem to enjoy it. The faces seemed like algebra-what did they mean? My first closeness to people came through tragedy: four people wiped out in an accident at country crossroads. I'd go down to the docks to see the Queen Mary, a part of England in the Hudson River. and hear the friendly sound of Liverpool speech.

People got drenched usthout even moving.

Discovery

In the hot city I saw a man take off his pants—doing the best he could in the heat without a penthouse. I wish I had his courage. When I first saw grownups reading comic books, I laughed so hard I dropped my camera in the sand. At home the comics were for children. In New York's Bowery I discovered quite a sprightly way of life—even a barber who patched up black eyes: price, 50¢. Then there was Grand Central station full of kids going to summer camps—wearing signs so nobody would get lost. One of my first assignments was a fashion show but I didn't have any feeling for fashion and was a failure at it. The Missouri girl in the Miss America contest was a revelation. I thought any girl in a beauty contest—well. I wouldn't want my sister with a lot of men eying her. I was surprised by Miss Missouri's healthy interest in her own beauty. This physical litness out in the bright light revealed a healthy mind and attitude.

I was delighted to photograph a supposed gangster czar.

Truman was a friendly man without a trace of almightiness.

Enjoyment

Assignments for Life took me around the country. I was delighted. I liked the frankness which allowed me to photograph a supposed gangster czar, such as Frank Costello, and the President of the U.S. Truman was a friendly man without a trace of almightiness. First time I photographed him he was about to make a speech. He turned and said, "Wait a minute boys, until I take this coughdrop out," I loved this. Mr. Maytag was the first American businessman who I felt was really impressive. He was arrested for speeding on his way to catch a plane, missed plane, paid fine. A week later he caught a fish and sent it around to the policeman as a mark of respect. Vice President Barkley showed a homely warmth. He sat attentively while a lady played and sang for him. I like the natural life of the cowboys. It delighted me to see them working and to watch horses running around unfettered. I'll never forget when I gave a cigaret to an old Navaho Indian woman. In her face and in the life of her people, I felt for the first time that the history of America stretched away back beyond England's.

Mr. Maytag, a businessman who was really impressive . . .

In the face of a Navaho woman I felt America's history.

It delighted me to watch horses running around unfettered.

Belonging

I was beginning to notice the difference in my own countrymen. Some Englishmen—like the one I saw in a drugstore—started to stand out like sore thumbs. Now, instead of the river of bleak faces, I saw individuals. I liked the lady who gave her dog a drink out of a paper cup... the friendly couple at a state fair... the athletic girl out in the sunlight. A pigeon roosted on my window sill. When I came back from an assignment, there were eggs. Then I watched a fledgling learn to fly. By now—seven years after I set foot on American soil—I have been buffeted and shaped until I fit. I feel I am a citizen of the place where I belong.

BIDDLE STREETER PROTECTED BY DARK GLASSES DEODORIZES A POLECAT ->

BOLD POLECAT pulls his 2-year-old brother past the hostile Rat Flit guns protecting Biddle Streeters' anti-skunk barricade.

Life Goes to A Triendly Fend TWO STREETS KEEP UP RIVALRY BY ADDING INSULT TO REVELRY

For three days in Wayne, Mich, residents of Biddle Street openly insulted residents of Newberry Street and the people of Newberry Street made public mock of the people of Biddle Street. The two neighboring streets were celebrating their annual feed which began 10 years ago as a softball rivalry and has been growing ever since. This year the Biddle Streeters, called the Rats, opened with a parade down Newberry where Polecats set up a barrier le and sprayed the Rats with rodenticide. The Polecats answered with a parade and were deadorized by "skunkierte" made of vinegar or dime store perfume mixed with water. Next day the Polecats won the ball game, but since the Rats took the peanut scramble event nobody could be sure which side had come out on top in the feud this year.

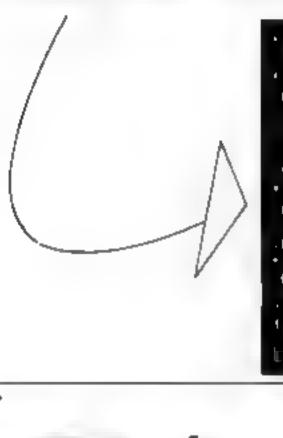

HOLDING NOSES and wearing the thoughts are an insult to the Polecais, Bids de Street wives eer at the Newberry Street paraders.

Rt BBING EYE fall of vinegut squitted from Rat Flat gun, Jimmy Renaur, 10. solis, "I rose skunks, they got me in the eye."

SHOE SCRAMBLE for 6- to 8-year-olds was won by Rats, started trouble because nearly everybody were red sneakers which could not be told apart.

SUNDAY BALL GAME in the park was won by Polecats, 14 to 10. Only married men can play because Newberry once had three young bachelor stars.

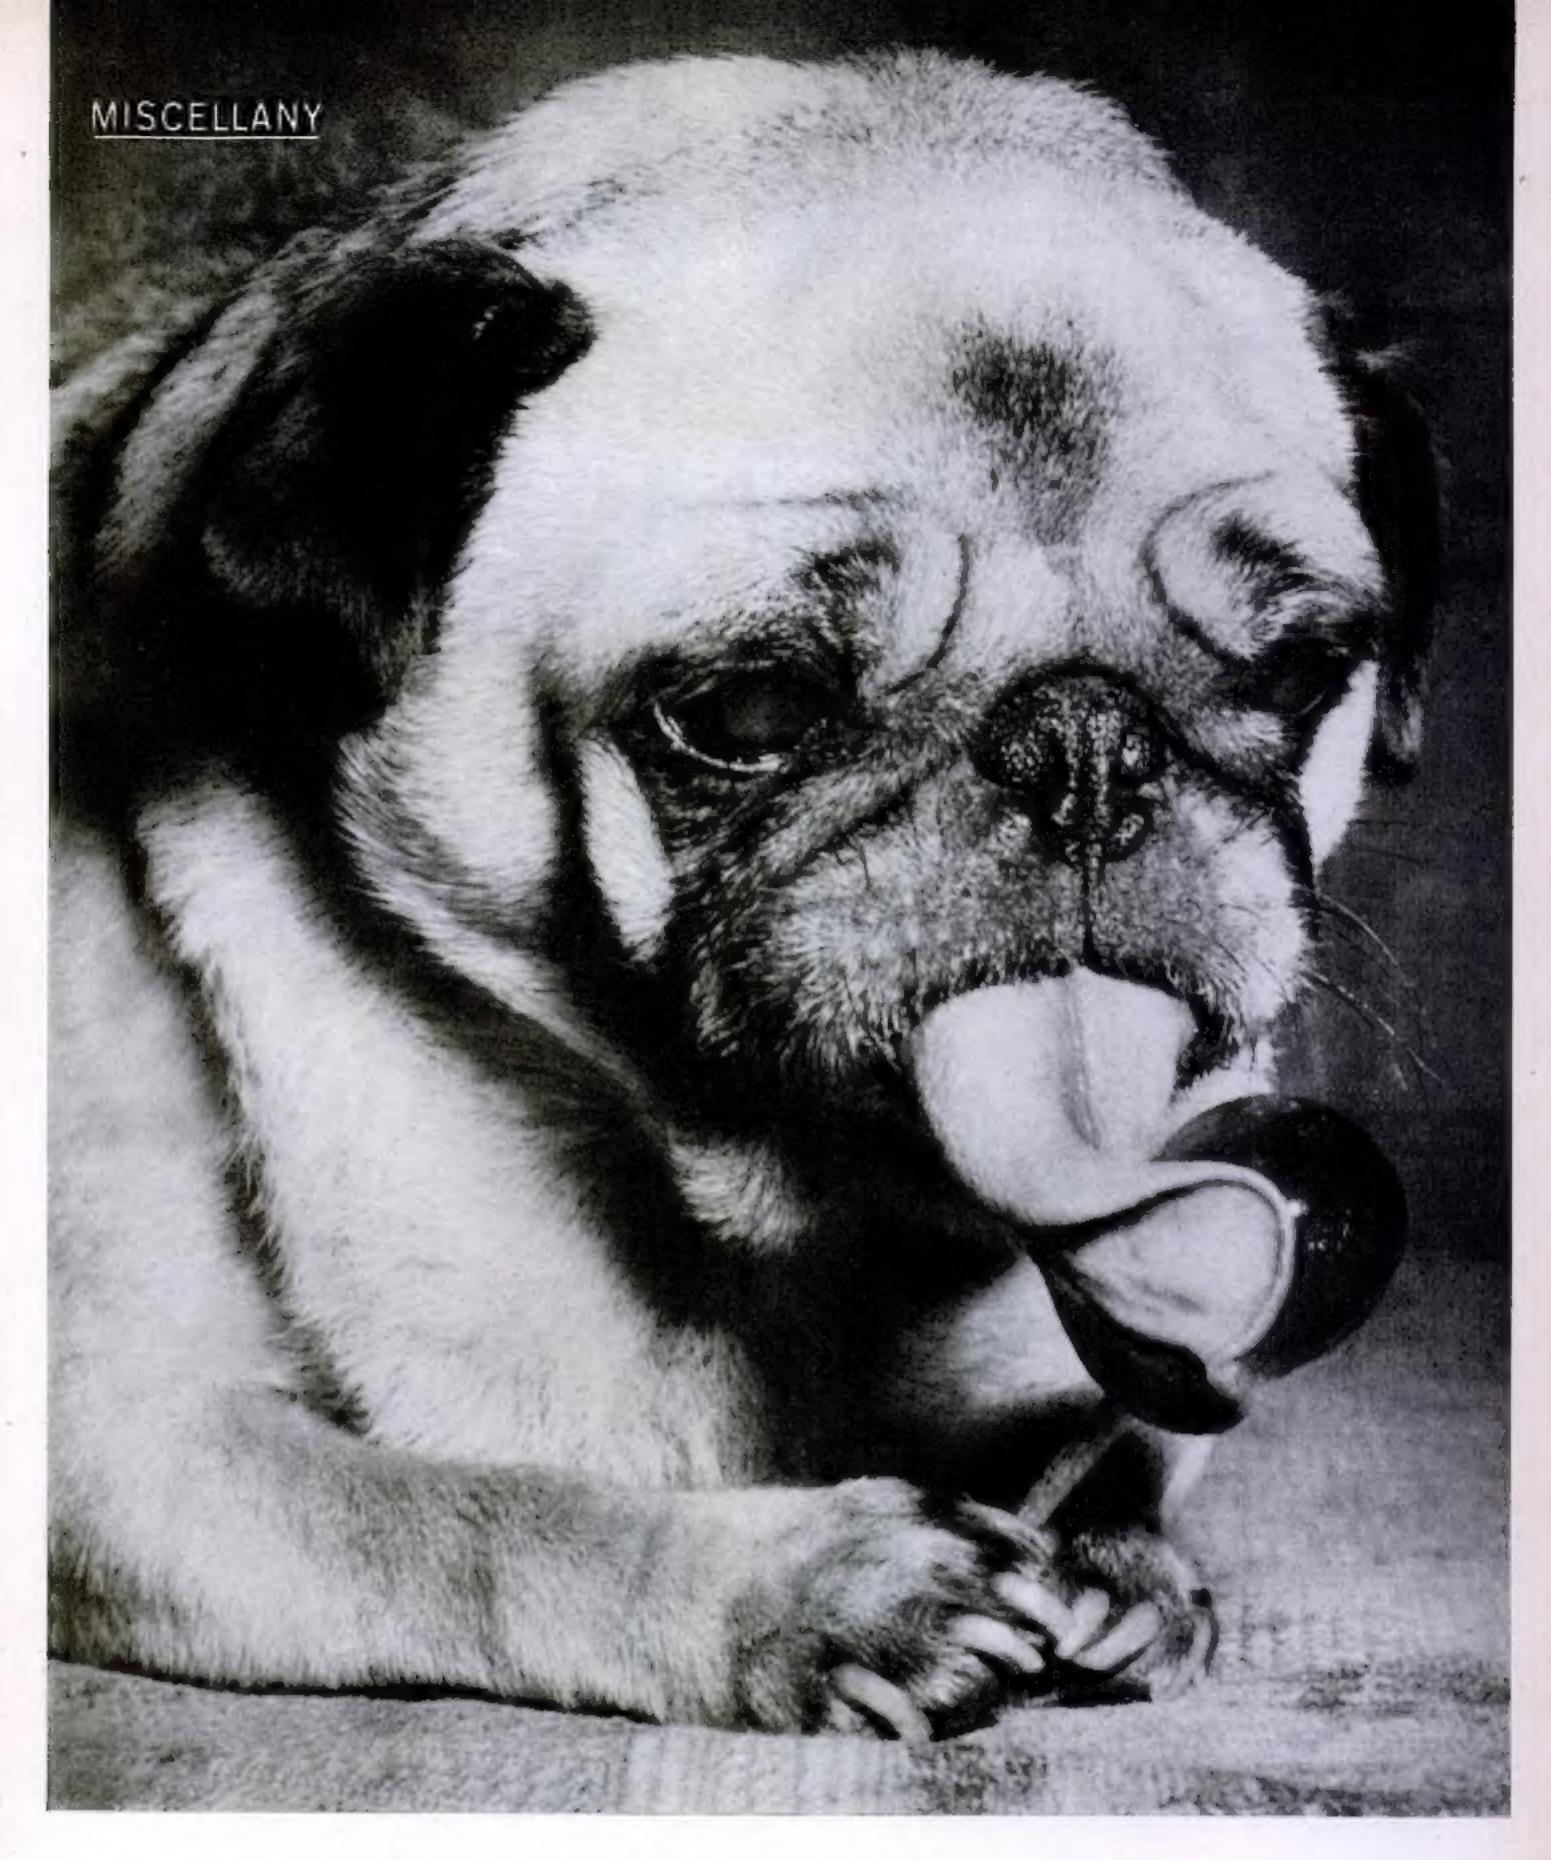

HEARTBROKEN RAT, Bill Reiser, weeps after placing second in ball-rolling contest. When winner turned out to be an ineligible visitor, Bill got a prize.

PUG SLUPS LOLLIPOPS

Sandora, a 6-year-old pug dog, is owned by Tom Fishlock, head keeper of the lions' house in the zoo at Bristol, England. One day recently she waddled upon a discarded lollipop which had been dropped by a visitor to the Fishlock household and hungrily began eating it. Right off the little dog developed an almost human technique for eating the lollipop, holding the stick between her paws and slupping her way to the wood. Next day Sandora wanted another lollipop. Fishlock, a kindly man, obliged her but cut down her consumption of dog biscuits lest she get too fat. He did, however, allow her an occasional ice cream, one of her secondary passions. Now Sandora receives a lollipop a day and seems content. She never demeans herself by stealing additional lollipops from the children in her neighborhood.
